Former Peace Leagues.

A LEAGUE of nations to insure peace is an idea that is as old as democracy itself. In every great war that has been fought those who participated believed that they were going to be able to make it the last armed conflict of mankind. The Babylonians, Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, English and French formulated rules in turn for a federation of nations that would permit disbanding all armed forces, because all peoples would live in amity with each other.

At the time when the authority of the Church of Rome was at its temporal zenith, it was generally believed that the nations of the earth were so united by the church that future wars would be impossible. Seven Roman emperors announced in succession that the peace of the world was finally and fully assured; but human nature proved too prone to evil to permit different peoples to live long in common association without developing something to fight about.

When the peace of Spain was signed in 1604 the English royal proclamations announced that wars between nations were ended and that it would not be longer necessary to collect money for the support of an army and navy of defense. How quaint sounds today this extract from the court of King James I: "Under our gracious Solomon, a prince of wisdom and peace, we are united in a league of amity with all nations. Wars among civilized peoples are no longer possible. World peace is assured. This alteration of times makes that fit now, which in times of hostility might have seemed unfit."

But the league of nations of the times of James I broke up in a struggle which, by reason of its duration and bitterness, is known to other times as the Thirty Years' War. European equilibrium was established to put an end to devastating wars among European nations; but it lost its balance and toppled into the present inferno, which is worse than any that has gone before. When one reviews the futility of the attempts of the past to establish permanent leagues of nations, one becomes impressed with the seriousness of the problems that face our modern civilization in formulating a treaty of peace that will permit the general disarmament of peoples. English students of history declare that the idea of a peace league of the nations is a philosopher's dream. They say that if England were to give up its great navy, jealous continental peoples would blockade the British Isles over night.

But President Wilson, one of the greatest living students of history, is not discouraged by the failures of the past. He believes firmly that the world has finally learned how to make peace, that the plan can be perfected as navigation of the sea and air has been perfected, and that the last and greatest war of mankind is drawing to an end. Every friend of good government, every real humanitarian sympathizes with the splendid hazard of the President's plan for a league of nations to enforce peace.

A Chinese Pacifist.

FENG KWO-CHANG, President of the Chinese Republic, has just issued a message to the Chinese populace in which he reveals a humility of heart that recalls Marcus Aurelius and others of the early Stoics. He admits that he has been a failure as President that his tolerance has brought undesirable results and that "I am too weak for the burden and cannot escape public blame and condemnation for being guilty in many ways."

President Feng tried to establish a government of virtue in China. When rebellion showed its fangs he sought to pacify the rebels by granting concessions to them. When wicked men made promises of reform he accepted their professions "at their face value." He displayed an optimism which would have been admirable in a Utopia but which served as a buckler to shield his enemies while they plotted against him and the republic. He admits all this and says that he waits only for order to be restored to retire into the country.

"As the central government has not acted properly," he says, "I examine myself and feel that I have many defects. I appointed Fu Liang Tio and others without carefully examining into their conduct, so I am guilty of ignorance of men. I ordered negotiations for peace while the rebels were triumphant. I offered easy terms in order to satisfy the popular desire, so that I am lacking in foresight. My effort to save from misery brought more misery; my hope to save the situation resulted in more confusion. Toleration brings undesirable results and I cannot make others believe in my sincerity. I dare not hold my high position in opposition to public censure, but the tenure of office is ordered by virtue of the constitution and cannot easily be set aside. Moreover, hostilities have been resumed and it behooves me to continue helping the cause. When order is restored and the populace relieved I shall retire, full of gratitude, into the country."

Like that of the transgressor, the fate of the pacifist is hard. President Feng sought to substitute a government of virtue for one of force. But unlike the western reformers, he possesses the sincerity of heart and humility of conscience that enables him to admit that his most cherished hopes have failed. No greater virtue has been displayed by any western ruler, whether in republic or empire; but President Feng's government has demonstrated anew that virtue unsupported by force is never competent to govern men. If our western pacifists would but consider the government of China under President Feng and be wise, there would be less clamor for a negotiated peace with Germany.

Shots from the Magazine.

Hoover is the guy that took the "if" out of thrift.

How about two porkless days a week in Congress?

Russia divorced her provisional government for failure to provide.

What Willie needs right now is a little friendly advice from cousin Nickie.

In these days of skulkers and slackers it is the apparel that proclaims the man.

The number of pacifists in the hospitals has increased 1000 per cent. in ten months.

The open season for peace talk closes every year when the snow melts in Belgium.

Anyhow, the war has done one thing Teddy couldn't do; it has squelched La Follette.

Here's hoping that knitting socks for soldiers will teach them how to darn 'em after the war.

With all Hoover's boasted food conservation he couldn't keep Dr. Garfield from spilling the beans.

Somehow, the opinion is gaining ground that the Bolsheviki is not a government but a debating society.

That German offensive on the western front is already beginning to resemble a "strategic retirement."

The Bolsheviks are being advised not to follow the lead of political demagogues; but if they were as wise as that they would be qualified to come over and give us a few lessons.

Reflection.

God made the earth,
God made the sea;
And then He caused there life to be.

It matters not what form it takes,
This universal life, which makes
God's presence ever felt and seen,
On nature's ever shifting scene.

Each spear of grass,
Each flower we see
Reflects God's true divinity.

AURORA LEIGH ARMSTRONG.

To Mother.

I leave you Mother, in the hands of love;
Not human love, but that enthroned above
All earthly things. Enthroned so high,
It knows not human woe nor hears its cry,

You've climbed the ladder of such thought,
And know each step with blood was bought;
No one could help you—all alone
Gained understanding to love's throne.

May you in perfect peace and rest,
Abide secure in love's own nest.

Entertaining a Gopher.

BY EUGENE BROWN.

SOME time ago I had my photograph taken in the company of my trained gopher, Teddy. The work of the camera was excellent and the picture appeared to hold interest for all who viewed it. It was comparatively simple to tell us apart. Teddy had the more prominent teeth, but I had the higher forehead.

The brow of a gopher is neither lofty or impressive and the idea prevails that he does most of his thinking with his hind legs. At any rate he is not nearly as amenable to reason as I am and the genial glow of intellectuality does not radiate from his dome as it does from mine.

As gophers go, however, Teddy was the most intelligent member of the family I have ever known.

I say "was," because I regret to report that Teddy is no more. He found a sepulcher in the yawning vitals of Muldoon, my Angora cat. The two animals happened to meet in the cellar when I was not present. Taking advantage of this absence Muldoon suffered his appetite to supplant his reason and when I came home the tragedy was over. About all there was left of Teddy was his teeth.

I felt grieved, but I could hardly blame or punish. Teddy was practically the only gopher for whom I had shown any conspicuous friendliness. I had taken him in a trap when he was young and he was the only one I ever captured that did not try to bite my thumb, so I filled an irrigation box with dirt, covered it with wire mesh and kept him there for a time. I fed him on lettuce and cabbage until he became quite tame and would come up and poke his nose against the wire when I whistled.

As a general proposition gophers are not succeptible to kindness—possibly because they have ceased to expect it. They realize that they are classed as outlaws and so they do not hesitate to live up to the part. Therefore you never find them as household or family pets, nor are they given away on Christmas trees. I am intimately acquainted with a man who can take a couple of massive lions and lead them all over town with no other restraint than a strand of baby ribbon, but put him to the task of entertaining or educating a pair of gophers and he is quite helpless.

So it was that I had no heart to punish Muldoon. He could not be expected to discriminate between friend and foe. All his life he had been taught to pursue the species relentlessly and how could he be expected to spare Teddy? Of course if I had been present it would have been different, but when a man goes away from his home he cannot always tell what is going to happen. Hey, Eddie?

Some months ago I wrote a polite note to the War Department suggesting the wholesale use of gophers in the trench operations in France. I reported from my experience that a gopher could remove almost as much earth in a night as a man would in a day. If gophers should be utilized in trench work it would release that many men for the actual operations of war. Or they could be handled in shifts—the gophers having the night run and the men the day job. This would obviate the use of lights, as the gopher really prefers to operate in the darkness. As a result there would be a complete surprise of the enemy and Fritzie would be startled some morning when a pack of gophers fell into his trenches closely followed by the American army with a lot of stabtools.

I told the War Department that a flock of half a million gophers might turn the war, and I rather thought about half the number could be found on my place. If they wanted them they were welcome to them. If necessary I am willing to sacrifice every gopher on my ranch for my country. I am no half-hearted patriot.

But the department did not seem to respond with any great alacrity. I got a card which said that my letter was received and contents noted but have never heard anything since. No wonder Senator Chamberlain suspected the department of unpreparedness.

I endeavored to devote my knowledge of and acquaintance with gophers in other fields of service. We were to have a squirrel commissioner in California, but there was vastly more need for a gopher commissioner. I wrote to the State administration explaining that most of my life had been spent in the capture and subjugation of the gopher and I had come to an intimate knowledge of his life and career. No one but a skilled and trained commissioner was capable of handling the gopher problem and I was ready to complete the sacrifice and take up the task in an official capacity. I was even willing to serve for the trifling matter of $5000 a year—which is the ordinary remuneration of a commissioner—although I could make five times as much as president of the Pennsylvania railroad.

But I ran into another colony of cold feet. The administration did not care for my credentials as a gopher expert, but wanted to know my qualifications as a vote-getter for the Progressive forces. A man who can successfully round up the Johnson vote is presumed to be the guy who can best trap and herd the gophers of our glorious State. The gopher appears to be unusually susceptible to a man whose voice has been so miraculously adjusted as to permit him to shout for Randall and rum at the same time.

In the meantime my application would be placed on file!

That has a familiar ring, too.

Many people ask me what I am doing for gophers. I am doing everything I can. I seem to be working both my brain and fingers to the bone for them and it is costing me so much to entertain them that I have very little left for my starving family. They have bored my place so full of holes that from a little distance it looks like a Swiss cheese. If all their excavations were merged into one we would have a five foot sewer from the mountains to the sea.

I have put in everything I could think of for their refreshment. There was the lawn that cost me a hundred bucks and after they had sampled that they were still unsatisfied. I got some lily bulbs from Formosa that cost me $2 apiece and after they had devoured these they came back sobbing for more. They have the most discriminating palates of any gophers I ever met, but any little delicacy I can put in for them they seem to appreciate. Whenever I get a new or rare rose they come from blocks around for purposes of botanizing.

I got in the habit of feeding them chard and lawn clippings in their habitations and thus save them the necessity of tunneling into my lawn, but they come on just the same.

At times I have become enangered and sought to relieve myself of the onus of hospitality. I have used traps made of wood, of wire and of steel, but some of our gophers are as old, as wise and as soft-footed as Bill Stone and they manage to elude or escape entanglement. When I prepare refreshment for them they carefully sift out the arsenic, the strychnine and the cyanide of potassium. They have laboratory tests that enable them to detect the presence of a deadly drug in the dark. When I shoot deadly rockets into their holes they put on gas masks and defy the fumes that follow. If I try to drown them out with a line of hose they throw up a dam that holds the water behind them and bore on to safety. I have lined their burrows with sticky flypaper, but they wouldn't get stuck. I have given them red pepper to make them sneeze and ground glass to make them thirsty. I have trained cats and dogs to watch and pursue. Sometimes I will go out and sing or recite for them and then when they come out I will sick the dog on them. But mostly gophers do not go far from their base of operations and it is hard to catch one away from his periscope or conning tower.

They are the wise boys of the soil.

I think if my ranch were lined with vitrified brick it would help some. They have heads almost as hard as a single tax advocate, but they will not bore through vitrified brick. But I would have to dig down about twenty feet to start the wall and then would have to plow the place eight feet deep and go over it with a comb in order to dispose of the present population. But after that they might be kept out, as they are slackers about going over the top.

Gophers have really been a disappointment to me. While they appreciate what you do for them they do not do it in the way you desire. They do not seem to understand that what you want is their room and not their company.

Down the Gulf of California.

from Paris to do light work in the company offices.

Long trains of coke are hauled from Tennessee or New Mexico, down the Sonora coast to Guaymas, and from there shipped by boat across the gulf to Santa Rosalia, for the giant smelter furnaces of the French company. Other cargoes of coke come by boat from California; and, on their return trips, these boats bring copper matte —enormously valuable cargoes of it—to the American west coast. Millions of dollars a year are taken from these hot, bare hills that Cortez overlooked. From Santa Rosalia back into the hills—where the four great mines are—the French have built a narrow gauge railway. And, f[illegible] into the bay is a magnificent break[illegible] that cost a great fortune in itself. Inside this, the ships of the company ride out the bad blows that hit the turbulent gulf in November and March.

Dozen German Craft Interned Here.

Previous to August, 1914, a great fleet of German sailing vessels traded between Hamburg and the Mexican West Coast. It happened that just as the war broke out, a dozen of these craft were due at Santa Rosalia, with cargo for the French company. The ships tied up—in this neutral Mexican port—to escape capture by the British sloops of war then cruising off the West Coast. And there they lie to this day—their lines rotting, the ships foul with barnacles and seaweed—their officers and crew half dead from ennui and long confinement in this hot, lonely port.

Water for the town is piped from far back in the hills. It seldom rains at Santa Rosalia, once only in every five or ten years, the natives will tell you. Tucked cosily away in this interior desert highland—miles from the coast—and watered by the mountain springs that keep Santa Rosalia alive, there flourishes a tiny valley of singular beauty and freshness. Here you find delicious melons, apricots, grapes, sheltering palm trees and grassy pools where wild duck are nesting; quail call from the gardens along the limpid irrigation streams. For, be it known, this peninsula of Lower California is a land of contrasts. You may urge your plodding burro along for hours over cactus-strewn mesas, rocky hills and sand wastes, only to descend suddenly into a small valley literally choked with vegetation, wild flowers and fruits.

It is over 800 miles long, and maybe 100 wide, this boot-shaped, extension of California proper. From the rich cotton fields of Mexicali—through the cattle ranges of Ojos Negros and snow-capped Mt. San Pedro Martyr—to the pearl coast at La Paz, the peninsula is a never-ending series of surprises and strange contrasts; contrasts between arid desert and luxuriant oasis, blistering peaks and cool trout streams. Here, too, there flourishes what has been called "The most extraordinary desert flora in the world." E. R. Nelson, chief naturalist of the United States Biological Survey, says of this plant life: "The combinations of species were often wonderfully picturesque, giving the landscape an individuality unlike anything to be found elsewhere. Many of these strange scenes seemed fit abiding places for the animal life of an earlier age, rather than the familiar species of today. . . Before me was a great bed of creeping devil cactus, which appeared like a swarm of giant caterpillars creeping in all directions. These plants actually travel from the common center, and I saw many single sections twenty to thirty yards away from the others."

And here is the hunting paradise of America. Of quail there are literally millions, and wildfowl, migrating from the north, fly over Lower California each year in endless procession. Back in the hills the lion roves, killing the lonely rancher's colts and calves. The wild cat is there too, and badgers, foxes, giant pumas, hydrophobia skunks, and the majestic bighorn sheep, or Ovis Polo.

Shooting Bighorns Down the Gulf Coast.

The California hunter doesn't have to go all the way over to Thibet—or far up into the Canadian Rockies—to hunt the elusive bighorn. Not over 400 miles from Los Angeles, among the high ridges of Baja California, this giant sheep is found in frequent herds. One American hunter told me he had counted thirty-four of these animals, filing in dignified parade from one of their sleeping caves in the rocks below Valle Trinidad. These bighorns seek such remote, almost inaccessible grottos in daytime, for shade and to escape the flies.

Revolution has lately interfered with big game shooting in Mexico, and during the past five or six years few American hunters have ventured after the coveted bighorn. But such as now take the chance are likely to bring home the cherished trophy—a pair of beautifully curving horns. The bighorn sheep country of Lower California is best reached by Calexico, or Ensenada. For about $400 to $500 one may hire guides, pack mules and equipment, and buy provisions enough for a two or three weeks trip. But this hunt is not for the soft, pampered lovers of ease—to whom shaves, baths and morning grapefruit are an unavoidable ceremony. On these high blistering peaks where you must go to kill your sheep, and wh[illegible] may have to wait for days [illegible] shot, a pint of water becomes worth its weight in gold, and one extra pound of baggage grows to feel like a ton. It's a husky man's hard job, this gruelling, heart-wringing climb after bighorn sheep; it's a feat that calls for wind, muscle and endurance—and the frequent loss of skin and blood—and above all for a man unacquainted with "nerves," who can shoot quick and straight even when winded to the point of collapse. For remember, the bighorn can scent you a mile off; and if he happens to sniff you, he's probably off before you've ever glimpsed him. You've got to take glasses and work up to windward, and climb, climb, climb! The nimble bighorn will skip up a steep, rough mountainside, climbing farther, and with no apparent effort, in five minutes than the trained hunter can climb in an hour.

In July and August, when rain-water collects in the "tenajas" or natural cisterns scooped in the solid rock of the Sierras, trained hunters can successfully stalk the stately bighorn as he comes to drink at these tanks. Cocopah Indians have a clever way of calling the bucks within rifle range, by pounding at intervals with one rock upon another—imitating the buck's challenge in breeding time—when they stamp the ground with their forefeet as a challenge to combat. Then fights to death occur among the bucks; hunters have told me of finding two such animals, horns locked, so enraged that they ignored absolutely the approach of the hunter, who walked up and shot them.

One American, who went from Texas after the "Lincoln County War" and settled in the high, unknown ridges of Baja California thirty years ago, kills his regular winter meat supply by stalking the bighorn as it feeds on the fat barrel cactus. He tells of one old buck he saw, a greedy fellow, who would march up like a true bully to where smaller bucks were feeding and, hooking one of his great curved horns through that of a smaller animal, he would drag the latter forcibly from the coveted cactus, and eat it himself.

There are no game laws in Mexico, and natives kill the bighorn the year around, for meat. This abuse has been brought to the attention of the Mexican authorities, and it is hoped protective legislation will soon be passed, as in the United States.

Which reminds me: should you go to Baja California, bag a buck, and start home with the horns, remember to get a certificate from the custom authorities that they're really Mexican horns—for it is against the law in some States to transport such horns, where killing the bighorn is also forbidden.

Pearl Fisheries at La Paz.

Fired by the splendor of the pearls the Montezumas wore—and which they learned came from this gulf—the looting Spaniards fought their way ashore at La Paz, making it the first European colony in this part of the world; this was in 1533. They soon subdued and robbed the native pearl divers, taking from them according to one old chronicle "hundreds of pounds of precious gems."

This town of La Paz, founded by these Spaniards, has survived nearly four centuries of Indian massacres, tornadoes, famine and one Yankee bombardment during the Mexican War. It is the constant quest for pearls that has kept La Paz on the map. Some splendid gems have been brought up from the hot, hostile waters of the gulf. Here in 1901 was found the great Cleopatra pearl worth $17,000. And it was from these same waters that long ago the Spaniards took that famous pearl which now adorns the crown of Castile, a pearl as large as a pigeon's egg and worth $50,000. This gem was found by an ignorant Indian who bartered it away for a mere fraction of its real worth. From April till October—which is the pearling season—La Paz is usually a busy town. Since the European war began the pearl market has been sluggish and gems can be bought at La Paz cheaper now than ever before. When the Spaniards fished here for pearls they used big Indians, who dived naked with forked fish bones pinched over their noses to keep the water out. Today, at La Paz, they import modern diving dresses, from Liverpool, with helmets and enormously heavy shoes weighted with lead soles so the diver can walk around on the bottom of the sea. And sharks, which used to make the naked pearl diver's life a career of hazard and tragedy, are no longer a terror; in fact it is now the shark that is nervous and not the pearl diver, for these big fish scoot hastily away at the odd sight of the diver in his grotesque glass-eyed helmet.

Sharks abound and attain prodigious size in these turgid waters. An American skipper told me of landing one giant shark twenty-nine feet long. Its sides were foul with barnacles, like an old wooden ship's. When they hoisted it on deck and cut it open they found inside a few human bones and a corkscrew. The pilot fish—that strange creature which is the constant companion of the shark—swam around and around the schooner after his big friend had been dragged aboard, leaping from the water again and again. The sailor's explanation of the alliance between the pilot fish and the shark is that the latter cannot see very well; that the pilot fish, which swims with its tail just in front of the shark's nose, guides the shark to its prey. And that when the shark has made a killing, it divides with the pilot fish.

The water reaches a warmth of 86 deg. in the lower gulf and the sea is crowded with fish and marine life: myriads of gulls, shags, pelicans and other sea birds live along the rocky coast and on the lonely islands; hair seals abound.

One sailor told me of a fight he had seen between a sea lion and a giant stingray. He said that early one morning as his vessel lay at anchor there came to him from alongside the odd squeals of a sea lion. Hastening to the rail he peered over, and beheld a sea lion and a poisonous long tailed stingray locked in deadly combat. He said the sea lion had sunk its teeth into the flat side of the big fish; that the stingray would curve its tail clear over its back like the scorpion does, and that again and again it would thrust the poisonous tip of its sharp tail into the neck and shoulders of the sea lion. Every time he felt the fish's sting the sea lion would snort and yell with pain, but always he bit deeper into the struggling fish. Gradually, as the poison took effect, the sea lion grew more and more sluggish; at last he released his hold on the big fish, rolled over on his back and slowly sank.

In spite of its wealth of pearls, its fisheries, and its minerals, that portion of the peninsula washed by the lower gulf is largely a forbidden land to all but the most hardy and adventurous of men. It is an empty, unfriendly, unpopulated region, and it can never be anything else. In the whole peninsula there are perhaps less than 30,000 people, or something like two or three per square mile.

Millions of years ago, when volcanic turmoil pushed this ridge up redhot and sulphurous from inside the smoking earth, nature was in a raging mood. It was then that she cursed the country with arsenic springs, mud volcanoes, and with the trembling Virgin Mountains near Santa Rosalia, where stinking sulphur breaks off in big chunks and rolls down the hillsides when the earth is shaking. It was then that nature got mad, and put up a "Keep Out" sign that few white men care to ignore.

Busy Bees Help to Win the War.

retreat, is usually stung to death in a few short minutes by the legitimate queen of the hive, no other bee having that right. The members of the colony may "ball" the intruding queen, enveloping her with their interlaced bodies until the rightful queen breaks through for battle.

"Balling a queen" is not uncommon. The bees form a solid living hollow sphere about her with their bodies, and if their queen makes no effort to kill the intruder the bees will continue the "balling" until she dies of suffocation or starvation.

Vigilant sentinels guard the portals of the hive, and the only chance strangers who can occasionally get by are foreign nectar carriers, who are admitted because they bear with them a load of sweets or a queen. After two or three days in the open air the workers are liable to suffer a complete loss of the hive odor, though they do not lose the individual odor.

Bee colonies are frequently divided, and on the third or fourth day after this division the hive odors of the two colonies are so entirely different that, if one did not know, he would never be convinced that so short a time back these colonies were one. Workers from the two divisions are as antagonistic toward each other as if they had always been separated.

Oddly enough, though the hive odor of a straying bee always arouses hostilities in a foreign hive, yet the odor of a strange queen bee they find singularly agreeable. It is the unmistakable hive odor that may cling to a foreign queen which makes trouble for her. If she has been out a sufficiently long time to have freed her coat from the hive odor there is considerable more likelihood of a welcome for her. Workers often do not realize that their queen has left the hive until she has been gone some time, and this is because of such a thorough permeation of the queen odor through the hive. After a while the queen odor grows faint in the hive, and it is then that the colony becomes aware of their queen's departure.

No animal, nor insect, with possibly the exception of the ant, has so powerful and highly developed a sense of smell as the bee. When the queen bee flies away, followed by the pursuing drones, she leaves a scented trail by which she leads them.

The sense of sight in the honey bee does not begin to be of the same order of development. Numerous experiments have been conducted by entomologists with the hope of proving definitely many things relative to its sight. But they are still points on which these scientists disagree; for instance, whether or not the bee can distinguish color. Some are inclined to believe they can, while others feel positive they cannot. Dr. McIndoo thinks there is no question but what they can, though probably not at all as man does.

Can a bee tell the shape of an object, whether it is round, square, rough, flat, etc.? It has never been satisfactorily proved that they can, though it is known that by their sense of touch they can discriminate between shapes if the object is small. There is no doubt but what bees can see great distances, but it is impossible to prove how well or how clearly they can see. In their hives the only need they have for their eyes is to distinguish light from darkness. Outside of the hive's walls it is much more important. They begin to use them the instant they leave the hive, in hunting flowers, in mating and in returning to their homes.

The auditory sense is more difficult to dispose of. Persons who work about an apiary tell interesting tales about the squeal of a worker. These bees certainly voice a protest if they are pinched or if they are trapped into a small area and cannot escape. It was believed for a time that the workers produced these sounds by means of their wings, so an experimenter clipped the wings, but the workers continued to squeal. Queens are said to "pipe." These auditory sense organs are thought to be in the head near each antennae in the tibia or fourth segment of the legs and in the fore plates of the antennae.

It is not generally believed that bees have a sense of direction, but rather that they follow certain landmarks. They are accurate barometers and know when a thunder shower is on the way. Many psychologists insist that bees are merely reflex machines —that is, that their actions are performed without thought, in response to certain stimuli, and are quite involuntary. The entomologist disagrees with the psychologist on this point. Bees solve their own problems in case of emergencies with a resourcefulness and initiative that would indicate that they were anything but reflex machines. For instance, if a foreign body, say a mouse, gets into the hive and is stung to death, it is impossible for the bees to carry the mouse out and equally impossible to have its decaying body in the hive. Their solution of the problem is to incase it with their wax, and then it is hermetically sealed to the floor of the hive, so there are absolutely no ill effects from the unlucky mouse.

FRIENDS well beloved, such a contradictory generation! One never knows how to take you. You are full of sublimities that reach to the very heavens, and just as full of baseness that plunges you down into the very pit of inferno.

You might live so comfortably if you only knew how. Comfort is a great desideratum among you humans, and your Eagle, brethren, often is astonished at your foolishness. He casts his eye over human life and contemplates the number of comforts you might possess, if only you all worked constantly, diligently and properly. But you do not. Most of you work intermittently, lazily, and to no purpose, often to a bad purpose.

The Eagle is no mealy-mouthed moralist, and is always indulgent of the frailties of human nature. He knows that there are some things that make very much for human comfort that are not necessary to human life. In a dispatch from Rome the other day it was stated that you spend your time cultivating crops that amount to 8,000,000 quintals of leaf tobacco. Oh, no, your Eagle would not deprive the boys in the trenches of their cigars, their cigarettes, or even a big quid of tobacco. But in spite of this he can not help reflecting that it is a waste of time and energy, and that the necessity only comes from habit, and furthermore that the time might be better spent in producing something absolutely essential to human life.

Then you are so wasteful of the things you do produce. Many of you think war is an unmixed evil. It is not. Nothing in human life is an unmixed evil, nor is anything an unmixed good. There is at once the best of all possible worlds, and also the worst. Every good thing has some evil mixed up in it, and every evil thing some good. The war will bring many good things. One thing it is producing is more carefulness, more economy, more self-denial, and these are all good things. The society butterfly has become as rare in these war days as the real butterfly in a Kansas blizzard. Women are learning to do things they never did before, and you are learning to deny yourselves for others' good.

Most of your activities are just vexation of spirit. If you only learned to live the simple life you would be better off in every way. Just think of the time and substance you waste on your dress. You could be more comfortable with considerably fewer clothes, more plainly and more simply made. Your health and strength would be much better if you ate less and if what you did eat was simpler food. Furthermore, you would enjoy your meals more. Here are some of you who stuff yourselves three times a day with heavy meals of the richest food, and then with two or three little snacks in between. What is the result of it all? An accumulation of waste matter in your systems, making your bodies so loggy and heavy that it is with difficulty that your vitality overcomes the load and drags you around. And this is the least evil of overfeeding. The waste matter makes you sick, produces stomach trouble, indigestion, rheumatism and many others of a thousand ills your flesh is heir to—heir to not because of your inherent system of life but because of your bad habits.

You waste your very nerves. Here is the man born to be a poet, to see the beauties of life and of nature; to feel these beauties in his inmost soul and to express them for the use and enjoyment of others. How does he fulfill his mission? Very badly indeed. He either through inherited weakness or from his own sins of life wrecks his bodily faculties, setting every nerve on edge, racked, sick and strained beyond all endurance. There was Percy Bysshe Shelley, a man by nature endowed with a mind so keen, with a soul so fine, that he was nearly an angel, yet by either inherited disease or that brought on by his own foolishness he was such a nervous wreck that he had no enjoyment of life, and 50 per cent. of his ability to minister to the enjoyment of others was thrown away.

A poet meant to see the beauties of life degrades his faculties and sings "How beautiful is death!" Well, if death is beautiful, Europe is the most beautiful place on earth these days, and is far more beautiful now than it ever was before. The "beauty" of death covers that continent just as thick as the "beautiful snow" covers the plains of the Great West after a blizzard, as deep as on the tops of the highest mountains in California after a winter storm.

To the mind of your Eagle, beloved, death is anything but beautiful. To his mind, death in any form is horrible, ghastly, hideous. Your Eagle loves life and hates death with an unspeakable, awful hatred. He thinks it was only the diseased spirit of Shelley that made him see anything beautiful in death. Had he been a whole man with a whole mind he would have rejoiced in life, enjoyed life, and put death off as far as possible.

So you go, destroying yourselves by your extravagance, by your foolishness, by your wickedness. Your Eagle feels compassion for you when he thinks of the comforts you might enjoy if you only had sense enough to husband your resources, use the good things of life properly, in due measure and proportion, avoiding waste and abstaining from squandering your substance. Think of the present time in Europe, not merely the human lives being sacrificed there just as wickedly as ever children were sacrificed to Moloch; but think too of the sacrifice of property. Here now for three seasons millions of men have been withdrawn from the vocations of peace to spend their time in the horrible avocations of war. Fields have gone uncultivated, unsown, and naturally unharvested. Then as if this were not enough you have had other millions of the very flower of humanity engaged in making engines of war and munitions with which to charge them, all for the purpose of destroying the handiwork of other men, of other generations and of other times. Nothing is sacred from the hand of your war god. Grand cathedrals have been leveled to the ground. Museums full of the arts of other generations burned down and everything in them consumed.

Your Eagle is not able to comprehend this destruction wrought by the hands of man on the handiwork of man. He can see a world full of universal peace, where there is plenty for every one to eat, drink and wear, comfortable homes for all human beings, well furnished, well stocked with everything that contributes to human comfort. He can see a world wherein every man works for the common good, and where no human being will be required to work above five or six hours a day, working with modern machinery, each piece capable of doing the work of from two to ten mere handworkers. And as the Eagle looks upon such a world, then withdraws his eye from the ideal to the real he is very much surprised, fairly astounded, utterly unable to understand the philosophy of human life.

But then he does not despair of you humans, in spite of all your foolishness. You do accumulate wisdom age after age, and the Eagle hopes that in 10,000 or 20,000 or 50,000 years more you may learn the proper philosophy of life. Every war is only a step toward peace, and the greatest war makes the longest step. To be sure, you have been treading the bloody road of war for many centuries, many ages and many generations. When every man was a slave to a few great lords, wars were more common than they are now. Yes, and hard as it is to understand the wars of the savage past were more bloody, more cruel, more inexorable than they are even at the present time. But as men have had more to say about the way they are governed, wars have become less frequent, and less bloody because the fighters have had something to say about beginning the fight and about how it should be conducted.

This is why the Eagle rejoices in being the American Eagle. Here is the nearest to a pure democracy, known among men. Here the people have most to say about their government, about making wars, and about how they should be conducted. Your Eagle rejoices unspeakably in the clear-sighted President who governs the conduct of the country in the time of war. He sees him looked up to by the heads of other governments, sees his wisdom applauded, hears his counsels approved, and he feels sure that out of America's entrance into the war will come sooner or later a world-wide philosophy which will carry on the war to a final finish and make future wars more difficult, if not impossible. It is difficult to conceive of you humans living together in a condition of peace. You have been scrapping since the world began, and have conducted yourselves much more like dogs that delight to bark and bite than good children "whose little hands were never made to tear each other's eyes." But in spite of your proclivity to war, the Eagle hopes through the influence of America to see the reign of peace finally established in the world. It will be so if the President's philosophy is carried out.

Yours for peace,

The Eagle

THE

LANCER

A LADY correspondent who signs herself "A Good Housewife" has written your Lancer an irate letter anent food conservation. She says the administration has made a very personal appeal to the housewives and the clubwomen, but it does not seem to affect those ladies who are fed abroad by generous masculinity who take this method of showing their admiration.

"The restaurants and cafes are crowded every night with men who have brought their lady friends for the express purpose of feeding them in sumptuous style. Nothing is too good for these gay charmers, they stuff themselves on expensive items on the menu, nobody think of doing without anything she covets, and the gentleman pays the bill with careless gallantry under the impression he is being no end of a dashing swain. And the chances are his family at home has been making every sacrifice, doing without a score of little luxuries, reducing their domestic menu to severe war rations—while 'the other woman' is fed on the fat of the land."

That is the whole tenor of the letter—there are pages of it—and one must admit there is a germ of logic in the lady's indignation. So far there is very little obvious food conservation in the public restaurants. The price has gone up, but what gallant hero thinks of the price when a little blue-eyed blonde with Mary Pickford curls and a chic spring suit, craves sustenance? It is perfectly good form to frown at swollen grocery bills at home but to economize on a restaurant bill, to show anything but the most nonchalant indifference to its swelling total, is rotten bad form. Many a man who would face a machine gun with equanimity would shudder to be caught calculating a cafe bill! It just isn't done. That kind of courage is mere mercenary vulgarity.

With all his seeming servility, there is one class of person who successfully awes humanity—the sleek waiter. He is a servitor, a menial, apparently sycophantic and cringing, he can be magnificently insulted with a tip, yet the average patron stands in fearful awe of his opinion—and his opinion of the gastronomic economizer is too low to be born. There is an appraising quiver in his eye, a lurking hint of scorn round his mouth, criticism in his very deportment which even the most parsimonious of men fear to challenge.

No wonder the little blonde orders and consumes with impunity—what is a mere government plea compared to the commandful presence of a bored waiter? The obligation to one's country sinks into insignificance by the obligation to stand well in this gentleman's estimation. I entirely sympathize with "A Good Housewife's" indignation but so far those waiters protect those greedy charmers as effectually as though they had the entire United States government behind them.

The Matter of Tips.

Which reminds me, while we are so strenuously making the world safe for democracy, this question of tipping ought to be looked into. The world can never be safe for democracy so long as one can patronize an able-bodied man with a paltry tip. Tipping is the very essence of aristocracy, it makes one feel superbly superior—and with all his covetousness, the man who must perforce accept tips for his livelihood cannot enjoy that comfortable assurance of equality, liberty, fraternity. The very best way to keep a person in his place, impress him with his inferiority, is to nonchalantly toss him a tip.

It is rather curious that the most democratic nation in the world, these United States, has the most sumptuous reputation for tipping. Grovelling menials cringe before Americans for their largesse in Europe—a fly-paper manufacturer in Europe can get more grovelling attention than a Grand Duke from these flocking servitors, much to the annoyance of the European aristocracy which has tipping down to a fine art. The lordly indiscriminate tipping, which utterly spoils the market in Europe, has caused many a belted earl to wax bitter.

Just as the American duchesses in England out-dress all the native duchesses in magnificence, so does the American merchant prince out-tip all native scions of the peerage. Many a gilded Englishman has shuddered to see an American give half a dollar, where the native would have felt lordly on sixpence.

And of course, the greater the tip, the larger the superiority. Every penny widens the class chasm. Our recognized system of giving the waiter a minimum of 10 per cent. of the total bill, is actually an assertion that the patron is at least 10 per cent. superior to the sycophantic recipient. I know a man who always comfortably restores his self-respect in just this way. If he has received a social snub, he restores the balance with an extra tip to the club waiter. If he is not making much headway with his lady guest at his little dinner, he compels her respect with a lordly tip to the waiter. It is about the least expensive method of reviving one's self-importance that I know.

Maybe when we have made the world safe for democracy the lordly privilege of tipping will be abolished. And anyway the world won't be safe for democracy until it is.

The Ladies.

This little matter of prestige is very subtle. Having admitted that women are human beings, having given them the vote, and generally conceded their equality in California, it always impresses me as rather undignified, rather cheap that any reference to the credit of women, to their ability or patriotism from any platform, always calls forth wild applause from the ladies themselves. The psychology of this is rather interesting. They have been asserting their intelligence and equality for so long but they evidently have a weakness for being reassured on the subject. It is obviously not one of the questions they have settled and dismissed. It would seem they are still troubled with lurking doubts and gratefully applaud any masculine efforts to substantiate their conviction. Like the good little boy round about Christmas time, they are very anxious to establish their goodness as an undisputed fact. When I have heard mediocre male speakers fatuously complimenting the ladies on their intelligence, I have waited and watched for the smile of scorn which I felt must come. Fancy complimenting an average audience of men on their intelligence and getting anything but derisive applause!

Can one imagine a regiment of men bursting into frantic applause when a speaker mentioned their patriotism. Surely that sort of statement is accepted calmly as a matter of course. But a feminine audience under similar circumstances waxes exuberantly applaudful, as though to say "Yes, and isn't it wonderful of us?" And it isn't wonderful or remarkable at all—the contrary would be amazing.

EVERY HOUSEKEEPER SHOULD KNOW—

What Comfortable Baskets Are.

By Retta Badger.

BASKETS have come into such general use these last few years and have so endeared themselves to us that I don't think they will ever go out. We have grown so accustomed to their light usefulness and their good shapes and colorings that not to have a basket or two around would be like missing one of the family. But among all our baskets I wonder how many of us have a good sensible market basket. You know we are asked most urgently to save on paper and the paper bag is one form of wastefulness that will have to go and go soon. Among the many utilitarian baskets in the illustration there is a market basket that is a splendid one. It is, first of all, very strong which anything or any one that has to do heavy work should be; it is equally wide at the top and base, which enables large packages to slip into it easily and its handle is not one of those long ornamental ones that look very pretty but get very much in the way. This handle is low and broad and fits comfortably over the arm. All together it is a market basket that once used would never be left at home.

Then there is the little flat old-timey looking lunch basket for the kiddies' lunch. It comes in a fine Filipino weave of red and black and is just the right size to hold the school lunch.

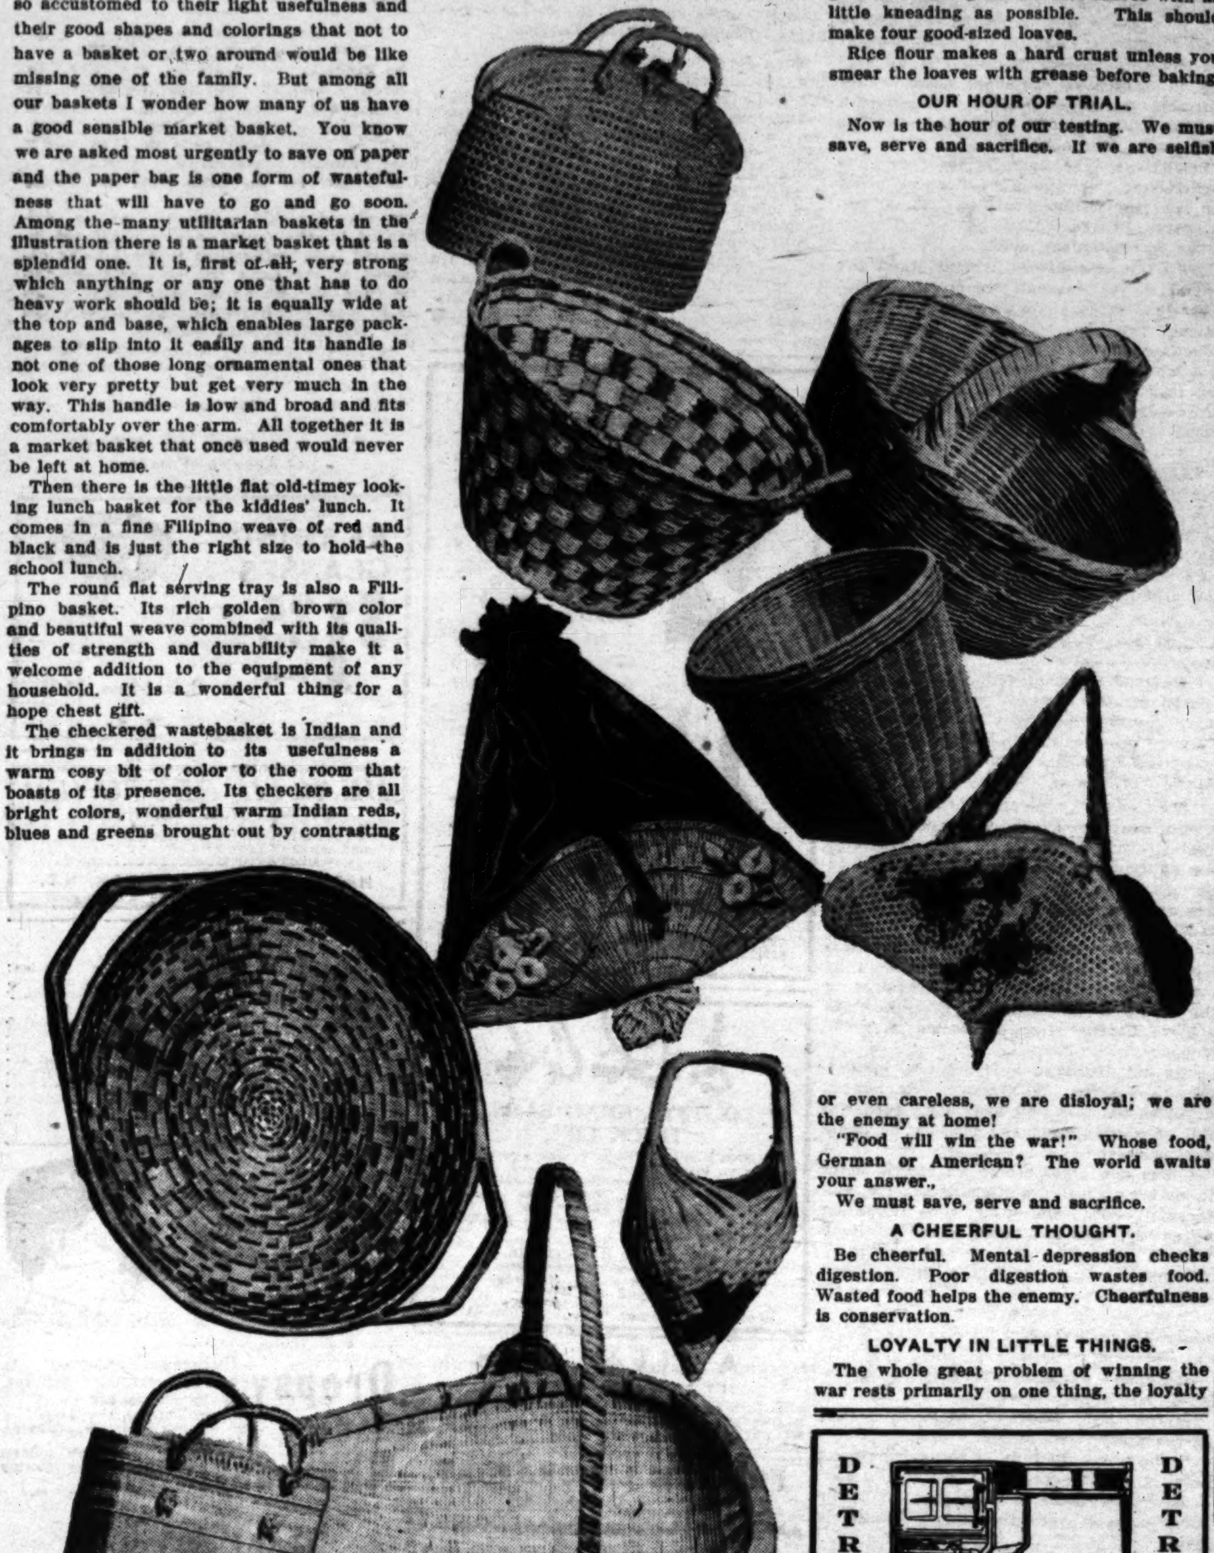
The round flat serving tray is also a Filipino basket. Its rich golden brown color and beautiful weave combined with its qualities of strength and durability make it a welcome addition to the equipment of any household. It is a wonderful thing for a hope chest gift.

The checkered wastebasket is Indian and it brings in addition to its usefulness a warm cosy bit of color to the room that boasts of its presence. Its checkers are all bright colors, wonderful warm Indian reds, blues and greens brought out by contrasting blocks of creamy tan and black outlines. I certainly fell in love with that waste basket.

The odd looking one, an oval with one end cut off and with a large handle is a Chinese wood basket. It sits firm and flat on the floor balanced by means of strong blocks of bamboo which are underneath and do not show in the illustration. It is one of the very good members of the group.

Did you notice the little rather satchel-shaped shopping basket, and the little one with the red cross on it to hold your small bits of work?

Then there are the most attractive knitting bags made from coolie hats. A coolie hat, a bit of silk or cretonne and the reins held very loosely on your ingenuity and you will have a bag that you will be proud of.



RELIABLE RICE BREAD RECIPE.

The following recipe for rice bread was tested out and submitted by Mrs. Thomas Armstrong. It is a thoroughly tested recipe and a very reliable one, besides containing but 70 per cent. wheat flour:

One and one-half cups mashed potatoes, 1½ cups boiling water poured over 1 tablespoonful of wheat flour and 2 tablespoons of sugar. Cook potatoes, flour and sugar about three minutes till the mixture looks starchy. Set aside till milk warm then add one cake of compressed yeast dissolved in a little tepid water. When light add 4 cups tepid water, 2 tablespoonfuls melted shortening or Wesson oil, 1 tablespoonful of salt, 11 cups of sifted flour, 3 cups of rice flour. Mix well and knead thoroughly. Set aside to rise. If the bread is made in the evening after dinner it may be left to rise all night and will be in good condition for forming into loaves in the morning. This is not necessary, however. If however, you are making it in the morning earlier in the day two or three hours will be sufficient time to give it for rising. Form into loaves with as little kneading as possible. This should make four good-sized loaves.

Rice flour makes a hard crust unless you smear the loaves with grease before baking.

OUR HOUR OF TRIAL.

Now is the hour of our testing. We must save, serve and sacrifice. If we are selfish or even careless, we are disloyal; we are the enemy at home!

"Food will win the war!" Whose food, German or American? The world awaits your answer.,

We must save, serve and sacrifice.

A CHEERFUL THOUGHT.

Be cheerful. Mental depression checks digestion. Poor digestion wastes food. Wasted food helps the enemy. Cheerfulness is conservation.

LOYALTY IN LITTLE THINGS.

The whole great problem of winning the war rests primarily on one thing, the loyalty and sacrifice of the American people in the matter of food. If we are selfish or even careless, we are disloyal; we are the enemy at home. Now is the hour of our testing.

DOWN THE GULF OF CALIFORNIA.

The Unopened Treasure Box. By Marco Polo.

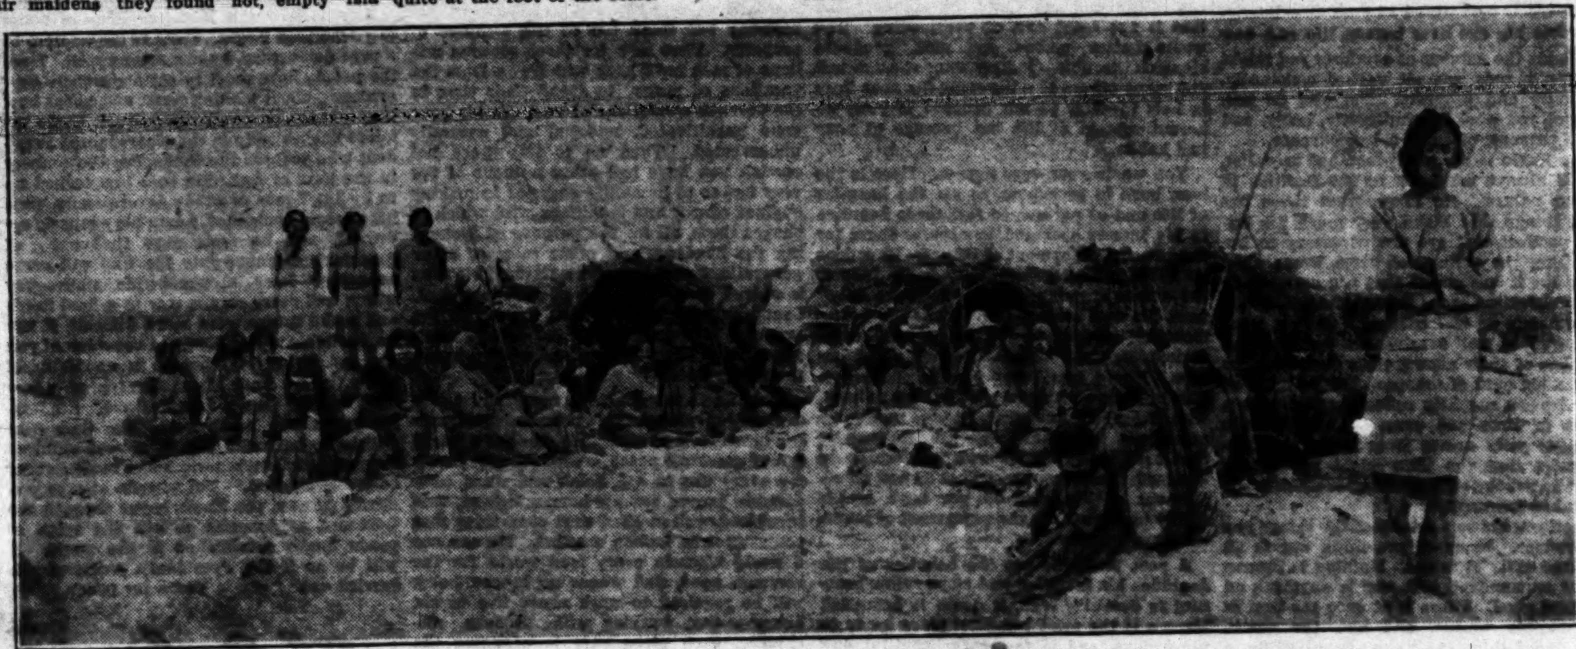
CORTEZ got here 380 years before I did—and they named the gulf after him. Golfo de Cortez, the Mexican maps print it, and its very name hints at adventure, romance, mystery. Many a restless rover, like Cavendish, Sir Francis Drake, and Coronado passed this way; if one tradition can be credited, even Robinson Crusoe himself landed at La Paz, on his way back to England after his rescue from Selkirk's Island. Gold was the lure—in those halcyon days of pirates, jack-boots and pieces-of-eight. But instead of gold the buccaneers found only mountains of low grade copper; instead of treasure islands and fair maidens they found hot, empty Isla de Tortuga, and the inhospitable savages of Tiburon or "Shark Island." Chagrined and impatient, the greedy freebooters cursed the gulf and quit it—gave it a bad name that it has never shaken off. To this day, no large body of water in the whole Western Hemisphere is so empty, so free of sails, so lonely and unexplored as this little known Gulf of California.

From Guaymas north along its barren east coast, around the cheerless and dead salt flats at the Colorado delta, and back down the wild, western shore is a stretch of over 1000 miles with never a town, a village or a human settlement till you come to Santa Rosalia. The map shows names like Port Libertad, St. George's Bay, San Felipe, Angelus Bay, et cetera—but they are mere names, and nothing more. At Libertad, for instance, I found only a few empty cans, a broken oar, and a deep hole in the dunes where some hardy hunter had dug for water. Antelope came, forty of them, to drink from brackish springs that appear at low tide. But on a two days' mule ride inland I found not a house, nor a human being. The mid-Atlantic, in 1492, was a gay and noisy place, compared with this lonely gulf. I know now why Columbus had trouble with his crew.

But, in spite of all this, the gulf is of importance to Uncle Sam. It's a handy sea-route to our southern frontier. And we ought to know more about it, and the country it washes. It would have been ours once, it seems—at least the northern half of it—if the ruled hadn't slipped on the map they were drawing when the Mexican-American boundary commission was working years ago. Of course, once in a while an American gunboat idles up the gulf, startling the goats with the night-play of its searchlight on the shadowy peaks—or having a quiet look for other things since our entrance into the war. But the average American—even the Californian living within a few hundred miles of the region—knows little of this gulf, or the singular country that it washes.

It is a voyage full of startling contrasts, this cruise down the gulf. There is peril, too, for those who venture ashore alone or unarmed, at certain places.

Far down the gulf, and cut off from the Sonora coast by the swirling Boca del Inferno (Mouth of Hell) Straits, the mile-high rock that forms the hostile, forbidding isle of Tiburon (Shark Island) lies blistering in the sun. Here dwells the fragment of a singular race, whose origin is wrapped in mystery. The Seris, these odd, little known people, are called, and in the whole filthy, degenerate tribe there are probably not more than 300 people. Yet, if we may believe the theories of some scientists, these Seris are directly descended from the real "first families of America." Ethnologist Powell of the Smithsonian Institution says: "Among aborigines known to Caucasians, the Seri Indians appear to stand nearly or quite at the foot of the scale."



The Seris live in hovels built of brush and kelp.

Many of the Seris are over six feet tall, and of enormous physical strength. Cortez wrote home to King Philip: "These Seris are so tall that the best men in Your Majesty's army reach only to their chests." Four of them, hunting together, are said to be able to run down a deer and kill it with stones. The braves often cross to the Mexican mainland, to kill cattle for meat. Mexicans say that Seris have been known to swim from the Sonora shore back to Tiburon Isle, each Indian carrying a quarter of beef lashed to his back.

And, whether justly or not, the Seri is looked on by Mexican sailors as a cannibal, and all down the gulf the word "Tiburon" is spoken with a shrug of the shoulders and a warning gesture. Once or twice a year a stray fishing craft may venture near Tiburon, to trade tobacco and cast-off clothing for abalone shells and small pearls; but visitors to the island are unwelcome, and it is usually given a wide berth by the few craft that go up the gulf. Pelicans are skinned by the Seris, and robes made from the feathery hides. A. W. North, in his excellent work, "The Mother of California," says of these Indians: "Fifty recorded attempts have failed to subjugate the Seris. Of unequaled endurance, and with a demoniac thirst for blood, they have repulsed or eluded all comers. So many of the visitors to Tiburon Island, however, have disappeared, leaving no trace, that most knowledge of the people and their customs is veiled in mystery. Of recent travelers who have never returned from the Seris I will mention two San Francisco newspaper correspondents murdered in 1894, a party of prospectors who effected a landing in 1896, and later the Grindell party."

The Seri women paint odd designs on their faces and bodies with a whitish material made from bird guano, and, during certain wild tribal ceremonials, the braves don a mask made from the heads of deer, with the horns attached. They build no houses, but live in crude, primitive shelters, made by laying poles or drift wood from one boulder to another, and covering these with giant turtle shells, brush and dirt. Dogs are amazingly numerous on Tiburon; it is said there are at least five dogs for every man, woman or child. These animals sleep with the Indians, and eat from the same pot at meal time. The bow and arrow is the popular weapon among the Seris, but of late years, by raids on the mainland and through trading with an occasional fishing boat, they have obtained possession of a few obsolete rifles. Their island is about fifteen by thirty miles in extent, and has an elevation of 5000 feet. Water is found at only one place. Mexicans say that years ago the Seris made a raid on the city of Guaymas, and stole a number of children. Also, that they poison their arrows with a brew made from boiled centipedes and rattlesnakes. Tuberculosis is killing the Seris, the Mexicans say, and a few years more will see the last of them.

What Cortez Overlooked.

From Tiburon on south, the peninsular coast presents an aspect of utter emptiness, a forgotten, uninhabited sweep of hot sharp peaks, waterless mesas and barren, drifting sand fields. I know of no region so obviously accursed lest it be that weary waste that sweeps from Aden on the Straits of Bab-el-Mandib (Gate of Tears) 1000 miles up the East Arabian coast to Muskat. A nightmare it is, a thirsty, burnt-up shore—like a province in hell—that only Dante and Dore might amply describe in strong words and startling pictures.

But just across the gulf from Guaymas, squeezed in between naked, unfriendly hills—a startling break in the solitude and silence—lies the busy port of Santa Rosalia. Here an Iquique-like town fights for life against heat, thirst and loneliness. Years ago a mad, lost prospector hit copper ore—mountains of it—millions of it. This was in the days of Diaz, the man who knew that Mexico must have the white man's brains and money, and who encouraged outside capital. So this Santa Rosalia copper belt, embracing millions of acres stretching clear across the peninsula, from the gulf to the Pacific side, passed as a concession into the hands of the Paris Rothschilds and Queen Wilhelmina of Holland. Here, in the midst of this inhospitable desert, an odd but most important mining town has been built. Almost nothing is known of this great camp, here in the States. We hear much of the Guggenheims, Pearsons et al. in Mexico, but little of these busy Rothschilds at Santa Rosalia. Exclusiveness amounting almost to secrecy is their policy. Few travelers go to Santa Rosalia; one reason is, that the steamers calling there are mostly owned or chartered by the French mining company, and will not carry passengers or cargo unless specially authorized. The Compania de Boleo this great concern is called, and it is conducted on a most elaborate scale. It practically owns the whole thriving city of Santa Rosalia which, with its outlying camps and great mines, embraces a population of 12,000 to 15,000 people. All the inhabitants derive their living directly or indirectly from this company. It owns the stores, the markets, and the shops; it built the schools, the hospitals and the tenements. It runs the local movie show, furnishing films imported from Paris. It even owns the church, an odd structure of pressed steel, which was built in France in sections and shipped "knocked down" from Cherbourg around the Horn to the lonely port in the gulf. Frenchmen, imported from Paris, serve as manager, directors, engineers, foremen, etc. The French live on a hill separated from the Mexican town, and comprise in themselves an odd little French colony, with light wines, the latest Paris ditties mailed in the form of graphaphone records—French gossip, manners—all set snugly down in this faraway, isolate nook of the world. Some of the younger men have gone back home to fight; other young Frenchmen, "blessees"—wounded—have been sent of helping a man, worry keeps a man from putting forth his best efforts. Moreover, it has a disastrous effect on the health. Worry greatly increases the probability of cancer, when there is a tendency that way. Worry also produces insomnia and dyspepsia. It is not hard work, but worry, that leads to premature deaths, paresis, neurasthenia, and other troubles that are so frightfully prevalent in this land of people with overstimulated nerves.

As I said in a New Year's souvenir card, sent to some of my friends a few years ago, "Don't hurry, don't worry, keep your head cool, your feet warm and your bowels open." So shall you be happy and healthy, and live long in the land.

Name, Please!

One would suppose that in these days of widespread information, it would be unnecessary to remind readers that letters without names and addresses receive no attention from editors. Yet, I frequently receive such letters, some of them perhaps interesting and valuable.

I have an invariable rule. When I get a letter I look first for the signature, and if there is none, it goes immediately into my capacious waste basket.

Also, if you expect a reply by mail, don't forget to enclose a stamped, directed envelope. Postage, outside of the city, is now 3 cents, and my salary is not so large as that of Charlie Chaplin—although it ought to be.

Hard Beds.

Hard beds and plain food are supposed to accompany poverty. Yet they are not curses, but blessings.

A correspondent calls attention to the harm done by soft, sagging beds, especially when one lies on the back. Beds should be smooth, but hard, or at least firm.

The same is true of soft seats, which contribute to the development of piles.

The Complexion.

However plain in feature, no woman can be called ugly who has a clear complexion, good teeth and a pleasant smile. On the other hand, Venus would lose her charms did she display a muddy skin, rotting molars and a sour sneer. Knowing this, women who have earned a bad complexion by wrong living begin to use artificial aids, which deceive no one, not even the men. Then they must keep it up, and the complexion gets worse. Of eighty complexion mixtures examined by the United States government, over 75 per cent. were found to be poisonous. Next come "beauty doctors," who sometimes figure in the courts, when their victims grow desperate, and brave the shame of publicity. I do not refer to experts who cleverly restore faulty features. That is constructive work. The other is destructive.

Dear woman reader, beauty is indeed more than skin deep. No woman can hope to have a clear complexion when she has a sour stomach and a foul colon. No amount of high priced outward application can possibly make you anything more than whited—or rouged—sepulchres so long as you systematically under-exercise, avoid the sun and overeat. You can have a good complexion, but you must earn it.

Massage will help, but it will not replace right living, nor will it restore to you a natural complexion. In a magazine story the writer, referring to a New York woman, says:

"The arts of the masseuse are visible in that curious swollen smoothness of the skin which gives the effect of spilled candle wax—its lack of wrinkles, never to be mistaken for the freshness of youth."

There are simple local treatments that are helpful, while you are getting your blood pure. Here is one:

First make a paste of fine oatmeal and milk, and rub this all over the face, with patient and thorough friction. Then, with a soft rag, wipe it off carefully and wash the face with lukewarm rain water or distilled water, at the same time occasionally using a little mild soap. This will insure perfect cleanliness of the skin, which is the first consideration. If the skin is rather greasy, a few drops of lemon juice may be gently rubbed over the face, as this has a tendency to close the pores. Then dry with a soft towel.

The use of soap which is too alkaline, or water which is too hot, remove nature's face cream, and excessively vigorous friction has the same effect, the result being a chapped, coarse-looking skin.

A few drops of almond or olive oil may now be rubbed into the skin. If there are any wrinkles, massage at right angles to the line of the wrinkle may be employed. Care must be exercised in this, however, as in the wrong hands massage may do more harm than good, a knowledge of the direction of the circulation in the veins and lymphatics being requisite.

The State Medical Law.

Referring to a San Francisco dispatch to The Times, mentioned here a few weeks ago, in which it was stated that the United States Supreme Court had decided against the right of drugless practitioners to practice in California, a correspondent writes that this was not a decision, but merely a citation of a previous case, and that the question is still open.

In any case, the rights of those drugless practitioners who obtained licenses under the law passed nine years ago, would not, of course, be affected.

The correspondent adds:

"There is one higher tribunal than the United States Supreme Court—the people—of whom thousands are demanding and receiving drugless treatment. Somewhere, sometime, justice will rule, and there will be a 'new earth,' where medical tyranny and injustice, with prosecution and persecution for helping humanity, will be unknown."

A Good Programme.

I received from the founder, Dr. Charles Conrad of New York, a certificate of honorary life membership in the International Nature Cure Health Club, founded in 1902. Following statement appears on the membership certificate:

"They endeavor to follow the injunction of the Master, 'Freely ye have received, freely give.' These words embrace the highest law of the universe—the Law of Love and Service. Only as we give cheerfully and freely the best that is in us can we prosper and progress ourselves.

"Surely you cannot render a greater service to your relatives and friends than by teaching them how to help themselves to the greatest blessings in life; how to achieve health, strength, beauty and efficiency.

"Be not dismayed by ignorance, indifference, opposition and ridicule. No honest, unselfish effort is ever lost; some seed will fall on good ground and produce an abundant harvest.

"Thus you will become an active factor in nature's great evolutionary scheme, and thereby work out your own salvation physically, mentally, morally and spiritually, here and hereafter, ever and forever."

It seems to me that this is rather a good programme.

Ignorance no Excuse.

Ignorance of man-made laws is no excuse, in a court of justice.

Ignorance of nature's laws is no excuse in the great court of life.

If you break the laws of nature, you must suffer the consequences.

Therefore, make it your business to inform yourself regarding these immutable laws.

Freddy Welsh.

Freddy Welsh, countryman of Lloyd George, lightweight boxer, who has seldom been beaten, is mainly a vegetarian. Several years ago, I visited him at his training Camp in Venice, Cal. He is slim and agile.

Welsh, who is not only a boxer, but a physical culturist and an intelligent student of the care of the body, has opened a "Health Home," at Summit, in New Jersey, on a high point of the Blue Ridge Mountains.

In the Island of Taiwan (Formosa) there are about ninety sheep, 140,000 goats, 130,000 cattle and 280,000 caribou (water buffalo.) Practically all of these are owned by native (Chinese) farmers, only about 5000 head of cattle and caribou being in the hands of Japanese. The government has 6000 cattle.

MARRIED LIFE OF HELEN AND WARREN.

An Awkward Call. By Mabel Herbert Urner.

"I WONDER what he's like," mused Helen.

"Probably wears a wrist watch and carries his handkerchief in his cuff," grunted Warren, as they approached the Hotel Costmore, where his recently married aunt was stopping. "Some ribbon-counter bounder who's married her for her money."

"But dear, he may care for her."

"Care for her!" with a contemptuous snort. "A man of 35 care for a woman of 50!"

"Why, I thought she was only 47?"

"Well, 47 then. And Aunt Agnes is hardly the type for a man twelve years younger to get dippy over. She's made a blooming fool of herself."

Turning in at the marble-columned entrance, they made their way through the gilded lobby filled with after-dinner loungers.

"Mr. and Mrs. Curtis calling on Mr. and Mrs. Roberts," was Warren's curt announcement to the room clerk.

Their names were 'phoned up, and a bellboy summoned to show them to suite 845.

As they followed the boy out the elevator and down the velvet carpeted corridor, Helen, dreading the awkwardness of this duty call, whispered an anxious,

"Let's not stay long. I'm afraid it's going to be terribly strained."

"Well, you make the move to leave—can't make it too soon to suit me."

It was a rejuvenated Aunt Agnes who answered their ring and greeted them with effusive but nervous cordiality.

In the first sweeping glance Helen inventoried the slim, youngish man standing by the mantel—and her estimate was not flattering.

The moment of introduction was awkward. Warren, who could always bring ease to any situation, stood by in obstinate, unhelpful silence.

"Ed, dear, perhaps you'd better light the gas logs," suggested Aunt Agnes nervously, to bridge the embarrassing pause. "Hotel rooms are always rather gloomy, don't you think?"

"Seems to be pretty comfortable here," observed Warren, with an appraising glance about the expensively furnished sitting-room, from which an open door gave a glimpse of the bedroom beyond.

The conversation kept to hotels, hotel service and restaurants. Aunt Agnes, flutteringly self-conscious, did most of the talking.

Though Helen had seen little of this aunt of Warren's, she had come to like her, for she was neither arrogant nor overbearing as were most of the Curtis family. A widow for fifteen years, she had always seemed lonely, and Helen was genuinely anxious that this second marriage should bring her happiness.

While not appearing to watch him, Helen was alert to every word and gesture of the man who lounged in a deep cushioned chair beside her. Beneath his careless bravado, he was ill at ease, and his effort to make a "good impression" on his wife's relatives was evident.

With his small blonde mustache and jauntily worn clothes, he looked even under 35. The lavender silk tie matched the lavender striped shirt and the lavender silk socks. There was no wrist watch nor sleeve-tucked handkerchief, but Warren had visualized the type.

"We're looking for an apartment," explained Aunt Agnes, "but it's so hard to get anything now. We haven't seen a thing that's really what we want."

"The one on Park avenue wasn't bad," commented her husband, lighting a fresh cigarette.

"But that was $3500. I thought we ought to get something for about $3000."

"And that's a whole lot more than you can afford," growled Warren.

"That's a matter of opinion," shrugged Mr. Roberts with cool arrogance.

Aunt Agnes looked flushed and uneasy, and Helen, fearing that Warren would say something more pointed, tried to turn the conversation into a safer channel.

A peremptory buzzing of the door bell was a welcomed distraction.

"Came this afternoon—sent up to the wrong room," explained the bellboy, handing in a large box, its gray stripes proclaiming an exclusive, high-priced shop.

"Oh, I wondered why it hadn't come!" Then impulsively to Helen, "It's a new gown—don't you want to see it?"

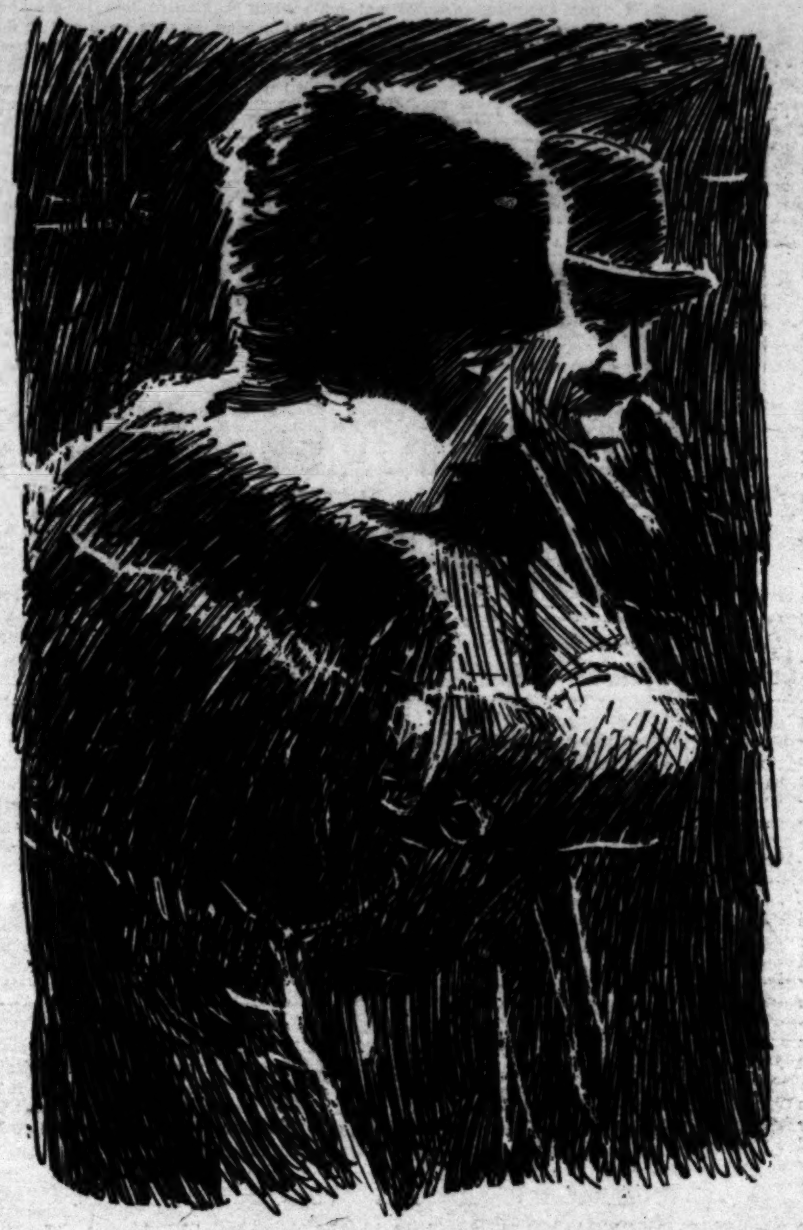
"I'd love to," glad to break up the constrained group.

In the bedroom, Aunt Agnes, opening the tissue-lined box, lifted out an evening gown of pale blue charmeuse with a shimmering overskirt. Exquisitely youthful, it was hardly suitable for a woman of 47.

"Yes, I liked it," glowingly, at Helen's forced admiration. "And it's Ed's favorite shade."

She was trying the effect by holding it up before her, but the delicate blue only emphasized her sallow pallor.

"You think it's too young for me," bitterly, meeting Helen's glance in the mirror.



she drew back with a start.

"Oh, no—no," lied Helen, stammeringly, "it's very becoming."

"It's too youthful, I know it is—but I couldn't help buying it." Throwing the gown on the bed she turned to the night-blackened window. "Oh, I know what you and Warren think—what all the family think!"

"Why, Aunt Agnes, I don't know what makes you say that," distressed.

"Oh, I know what everyone always says when a middle-aged woman marries a younger man! But I've been alone so long. I wanted some one to care for me—and he does care," defiantly.

"I'm sure he does," murmured Helen.

"Warren doesn't think so. He thinks Ed married me for my money. That's why he said that about the apartment."

"Oh, Warren's always saying caustic things," apologetically. "He really doesn't mean them."

"He meant that. He disliked Ed the moment he came into the room—I could feel it. And I wanted them to be friends," pathetically.

She had turned back to the gown. Again she held it up before her, studying the effect in the mirror—then again threw it back on the bed.

"Oh, it's such a hideous thing to grow old. If our minds would only age with our faces—but they don't! To have all the desires and impulses of a woman of 30—and to look 47!"

"But Aunt Agnes, you don't look that," protestingly.

"You really think not?" wistfully. "Perhaps not at night—but in the morning—"

"How long you two going to stay in there?" called Warren.

Helen, sensing that conversation in the front room was becoming difficult, remembered her promise to make the move for departure.

"Oh, I'm forgetting about the time—and Warren has a hard day tomorrow."

"Why, we're going down to the restaurant and have a little supper," urged Mr. Roberts as they entered.

"Don't count us in on that," Warren rose, with brusque finality. "We'll have to be getting along."

"We want you to dine with us one evening next week," invited Helen. "Either Wednesday or Thursday—if you're free."

Thursday was decided upon, but Mr. Roberts was still insistent upon the supper.

"At least you'll come down and have a drink?" he protested.

"Not tonight," the curtness of Warren's refusal verged on rudeness.

"We'll wait until you're in your new apartment," propitiated Helen.

The awkwardness of leave-taking over, Warren strode down the hall with the air of disagreeable duty discharged.

"You weren't very affable," reproved Helen, when they reached the street.

"Affable? To that pin-headed puppy! Had to leave me alone with him, didn't you? A pleasant half-hour that," grimly. "And now we're in for a dinner."

"Why, we had to have them some time. Dear, do try to be nice to him—for your aunt's sake. He seemed to care for her—and she looked happier and younger than I've ever seen her."

"Been married how long—a week? Wait a year. No, I won't give 'em six months! Come in here—I need a shaving brush," as they approached a green-and-blue-jarred window. "Keep forgetting the confounded thing—half the bristles out of that old one."

In the drug store Helen waited by the perfumery counter, viewing the French labels and brooding over Aunt Agnes, until Warren joined her, thrusting a pink-stringed parcel into his pocket.

As they left the shop, she drew back with a start. There, strolling by, with swinging cane, cigarette, gray gloves, and brown derby at a jaunty angle—was Mr. Roberts.

"Escaped already, eh?" shrugged Warren. "Out for a pleasant evening!"

"Dear, you don't know that! She might've sent him for something."

"She might—but she didn't! What'd I say—six months! Well, I meant six weeks. Great Guns," with a snort of disgust, "to think Aunt Agnes should be such a fool!"

Helen was achingly conscious of the pathos of it all. She could still see Aunt Agnes's wistful sallowness as she held up the shimmering gown.

"But if she's really young at heart, if it's only her face that's old?" repeating her words. "If she's so lonely and really needs some—"

"Then let her buy a parrot or a bull pup. They'd be cheaper and a whole lot more company than that bird!"

Cat Invented the Cotton Gin.

We learn from history that Eli Whitney invented the cotton gin, but people who are interested in the great cotton industry of the Southwest will probably be surprised to learn that a cat first demonstrated the principle upon which the cotton gin was founded. Anyone who has seen an Imperial Valley or Salt River Valley cotton in action will understand that this story is entirely plausible.

Before Eli Whitney got into the public eye he went down the street one afternoon to lean on the garden fence and chat with his sweetheart a while. During the course of their visit she called his attention to a brood of fluffy chickens in a slat coop near the house.

While they were admiring the chicks, along came the house cat, hungry for fresh meat. Tabby reached in to claw a chick out of the coop, but as she did so the old mother hen pecked at her. That caused the cat to make a sweeping swipe at one of the chicks, with her claws exposed. She did not get the chick, but she withdrew her paw with a bunch of fluff clinging to her claws.

Whitney witnessed the incident, and the idea struck him quite forcibly. Turning to his sweetheart he said: "At last I have a plan for separating cotton from the seed. What we need is a machine that will act like the cat's paw. The cat struck at the chicken and removed its feathers. I want a machine that will strike at the cotton and remove it from the thing to which it is fastened."

So he invented a machine which had a multitude of fine teeth revolving rapidly on a cylinder, and when the cotton was fed through it the teeth tore all the cotton from the seed in much the same way as the cat's claws stripped the fluff from the baby chick.

The machine designed by Whitney which has been such a blessing to humanity was practically as successful at the outset as it is today. It performed the work that was cut out for it, and nothing better has been invented since that time. With slight changes the cotton gin of today is the cotton gin that Eli Whitney realized in his brain the moment he saw the cat sideswipe the chicken. The cat had been carrying the secret of the cotton gin around in one of her paws for centuries, and it only required a close observer to discover that fact.

CARE OF THE BODY.

White Sugar.

GROSSLY heavy consumption of refined sugar is the chief reason why Americans are known abroad as a nation of dyspeptics. One of the first instructions given by me to consultants is to cut out white sugar. Within a few months the beneficial results are always apparent.

In the February Physical Culture appeared an article on the subject, that is entirely in accordance with my teachings. It is by Alfred W. McCann, food expert of the New York Globe. Here is a digest of the article:

"Combining the various forms of refined sugar—including glucose candies, corn syrup and table syrup made of glucose and refiners' syrup—and eliminating infants, the aged, whisky drinkers and invalids, the average annual consumption of refined sugars in the United States is at least 150 pounds per person.

"The figures of the Department of Commerce show that in Germany the consumption is sixteen pounds, in France twenty-eight pounds and in Great Britain thirty pounds. Without realizing it, we have become a nation of refined sugar hogs.

"Sugar, as now manufactured, yields only heat to the body. The end products of its combustion in the body are acid, of which the American people consume far too much in the shape of acid-producing refined flour, refined breakast foods and meats, breaking down the resistance of the body against anemia, tuberculosis, pneumonia, heart disease and diabetes.

"Already serious evidence of the ravages brought about through the breakdown of this defense is found in the abnormal number of rejects condemned as unfit for military service by the medical examiners of our army and navy.

"The very flower of the nation, her young men between the ages of 19 and 30 at a time when, if ever, they should be physically perfect, bear witness to the fact that in a land where foods of every kind are abundant there is something radically wrong in the selection of our diet.

"Formerly, people ate unrefined grain products, unrefined sugars and more vegetables, fruits and greens, furnishing alkaline substances to the body. Then came highly milled grains, our first grave dietetic error. Still we had old-fashioned brown sugar, manufactured on the sugar plantations. Then the sugar refiners, grasping at ways and means of earning greater profits conceived the idea that if they could prejudice the public against brown sugar nobody would buy it. So they started to drive out of the American market all the old-fashioned brown sugar then made on the cane plantations. Twenty years ago they inaugurated one of the most violent advertising campaigns ever witnessed in the United States, each advertisement accompanied by a picture, said to be an enlarged photograph of a dreadful looking animal, described as a cross between a louse and a lizard.

"Wholesale bakers' supply houses, unknown to the housewife, continued to handle the stuff in carload lots and the retail bakers fed it, without arousing their suspicion, to the poor creatures who wouldn't dream of using it in any home-made product.

"The poor plantation owner, who made brown sugar just as maple sugar is made today, found his market closed to him. His only means of disposing of his raw sugar was to sell it to the refiner. This is what the refiner wanted, and this is what he got.

"Just as the farmer used to send his grain to the local grist mill, but was gradually forced to ship it to the centralized roller mills, thereby losing control of his product, and furnishing enormous profits to a few highly organized groups of money makers, so also the planter found it necessary to do business with a few monopolists or quit.

"It has been exclusively established that the circulating blood cannot carry for the needs of the burning process any sugar in excess of one-tenth of 1 per cent. of the total volume of blood. To get more than this limited quantity of sugar into the blood circulation vital organs must first break down.

"We simply cannot utilize more sugar than this fixed limit permits, for which reason the excess sugar now consumed constitutes one of our biggest waste problems.

"Yet, always are we urged to consume more sugar, not, as is quite apparent, for the good of our health, but for the benefit of the sugar industry.

"Cramming ourselves with sugar, in quantities never before consumed by any nation in the history of the world, we are literally overloading the pancreas, and the liver, kidneys, lungs, skin and other glands are whipped into action to dispose of the excess fuel.

"How long it takes for these glands, taxed beyond their strength, to completely break down we do not know. But we do know that sugar gluttony is one of the seven deadly sins, because it is a slow form of suicide.

"Scientists have proved that in diseased conditions of the pancreas—although they do not know how such diseased conditions are established—all excess or waste sugar is eliminated through the kidneys.

"How long the kidneys can stand up under such overloading is not known. But it is known that in America kidney disease in one form or another is constantly on the increase."

To these truthful remarks by Mr. McCann, I add that in these days of food conservation it is absolutely illogical that we should, at great expense, be transforming hundreds of thousands of acres of perfectly wholesome food, in the shape of sugar beets, into a substance that is more of a poison than a food.

Get your sweets from fruits fresh and dried and roots, like beets and carrots, to which you may occasionally add a little concentrated sweet, like honey, brown sugar, or maple sugar, but these should not be eaten with food—or, at least, not with starch foods.

Dancing.

A wealthy woman, 66 years of age, died recently in Pasadena. She claimed that her life had been much prolonged, notwithstanding a chronic disease, by the advice of her physician, who recommended her to dance frequently, which she did, sometimes hiring professional partners.

Down to the end of the eighteenth century, youths and maidens of Old England disported themselves in decorous dances on the village green, around a May pole—a relic of phallic worship—while the rich and powerful, in castle halls, trod the stately minuet. This was followed by the decent but somewhat more lively quadrille and other square dances. A century ago the waltz was imported to England, originating, strange to say, in Germany, supposed to be the home of bourgeois propriety. Even Byron, as he tells us, was slightly shocked at the waltz, and Byron was not exactly a Puritan, as you may know, if you have read Don Juan.

The most popular of the present day hugging matches of the ballroom are as far beyond—or beneath, as you please—the waltz of the year of Waterloo, as the latter was behind the minuet. Their chief object is evidently to permit two persons of the opposite sex to come into as close physical contact as possible, while ostensibly going through the measures of a "joyous dance," although, to judge from some of the performers' faces, you might suppose they were engaged in a painful religious ordeal. Square dances have altogether gone out. The young people want hugging—and they are getting it. No wonder unsophisticated Oriental visitors ask if women who thus permit, in public, male embraces set to music, are "respectable."

It is absurd to suppose that healthy, warm-blooded young men and women, under the stimulus of bright lights, sensuous music and stimulating food—and sometimes drink—can for hours closely embrace each other without unduly arousing their sexual passions. Statistics show that next to the love of dress, the dance hall is a leading cause of prostitution.

There are serious hygienic objections to dancing, as it is carried on now-a-days. Among them may be mentioned late hours, poor ventilation, the inhaling of dust, and the unnatural physical strain. At the time, this strain upon the vital force goes unnoticed, under the combined stimulus of music and mirth, just as in the excitement of battle a soldier may be insensible to a serious wound. Many a frail girl who protests that she cannot walk a mile on a highway, will in a ballroom go through the equivalent of a ten mile climb.

Of late, a revival of the picturesque and seemly folk dances of various European countries has been introduced in America, having been made a part of the public school course in New York. This is an excellent idea, that should spread. It is natural and wholesome for healthy young folk, like the young of animals, to desire to work off some of their surplus energy in physical motion. Where decency and reasonable hours are enforced, a mixed dance in a well ventilated hall is also commendable.

Some sour-minded people, who confound cirrhosis of the liver with religion, would go to the extreme of forbidding dancing altogether. Three ministers appeared recently before the San Francisco supervisors, to protest against the establishment of municipal dances, under the plea that such action "would misrepresent to the world the moral tone of the city." And this in a city that, until recently, sheltered the "Barbary Coast" dance halls.

Our sad old materialistic world will never be made better by proscribing innocent pleasures. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." Better dance more and "do" people less. It is not, however, necessary that dancing should be either licentious or unhealthful.

Boxing.

Raymond B. Fosdic, chairman of the Army and Navy Commission on Training Camp Activities, believes that boxers are doing more than chaplains to keep up the morale of the United States army. In an address delivered in Chicago he said:

"A man like Packy McFarland has more good effect on the morale of an army than any dozen chaplains I have ever seen.

"Athletics take the place of booze, and mass singing, the reading of instructive books, and simple playful games have supplanted doubtful recreations."

Apart from whatever influence boxing may have on the moral character, it is a most valuable exercise. It is better than the mechanical stunts of the gymnasium. It brings all the muscles of the body into action and teaches alertness.

All boys should learn the "manly art of self-defense." Nearly fifty years ago I had my first lessons in boxing from an old retired sergeant of the British army when I was a member of the Honorable Artillery Company of London. I did not keep it up long enough to get much benefit from it.

Professional boxing, like horse racing, has fallen in disrepute of late years, on account of the dirty swindling that has become attached to those sports. This, however, is no more of an argument against boxing, than profanity and the smoke of bad cigars are arguments against billiards.

Don't Worry.

An article was recently reprinted in The Times from a Memphis newspaper, in which the writer tried to make out that worry is in a way a good thing—that people who don't worry are like turtles, that the successful man has to worry, and that "the man who never worries is nothing but an existence, unsatisfactory to himself and disgusting to others."

This is foolish. It is the sort of stuff that bum writers work off for the sake of saying something likely to excite attention and be copied because it is absurdly wrong—like most of Woods Hutchinson's articles on health.

Worry—which is a form of fear—is the greatest enemy of the human race. Instead

UNCLE SAM, MASTER BUILDER.

Enormous Construction Plans. By Frank G. Carpenter.

Acres of Offices.

GREAT STORAGE WAREHOUSES FOR MUNITIONS AND SUPPLIES AT THE TERMINALS. SCORES OF INDUSTRIAL CITIES TO BE CREATED. GOVERNMENT HOTELS AND DORMITORIES AT WASHINGTON—HOW THE CANTONMENT CONTRACTS WERE MADE. WONDERS OF SPEED AND COST EFFICIENCY PRODUCED THROUGH THE COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

WASHINGTON (D. C.)—Uncle Sam, builder!

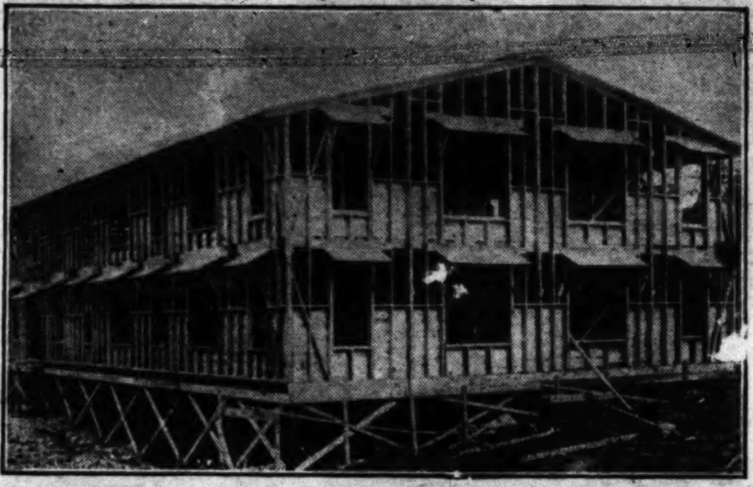
His plans are beyond the wildest dreams of the Arabian Nights, and his achievements make Aladdin look like a piker. There has been nothing to compare with him since 1000 years before Christ, when King Solomon brought King Hiram of Tyre into his construction gang and built the great temple, or even since King Kufu started the mighty pyramid of Ghizeh, in Egypt, some thirty-seven centuries before King David's wife, the widow Uriah, gave little Solomon his first play-blocks to build with. Aladdin rubbed his lamp, and his palace was built in a night. Uncle Sam raises his hand, and two-score military cities spring into being. King Solomon spent years in building the temple at Jerusalem. Here in Washington Uncle Sam has created single buildings with a ground floor nine times as great within less than a month. King Kufu kept 100,000 men at work twenty years in constructing the great pyramid, and it took him ten years to make the road necessary to bring the stones from the quarry. Uncle Sam has made hundreds of miles of concrete road in the forty or fifty military cities I have referred to, and within a few months in Henry Park, half-way between the Capitol and the White House, he has just about completed in less than 100 days a great office building, which has a floor space more than twice as great as the ground upon which the mighty pyramid of Cheops is built.

You have all read something of the building of the cantonments—thirty-two great cities with living and working accommodations for more than 1,000,000 men. That work was gigantic and it was all done between June and September. I shall write more of it further on in this letter. But first I want to say a word about the big construction work going on in this city of Washington. When the war began the government service was running along at plow-horse speed. There were 30,000 or 40,000 employees who had been trained in the dilatory, red-tape methods of peace, and Uncle Sam nad to put into action an army of new cost efficiency experts and speed the old service up to the war. Billions of money were appropriated by Congress and gigantic plans were soon under way. The government sent out its requirements and hundreds of our best business men volunteered and came here from all parts of the Union. Some of them accepted salaries which are less than 2 cents per week. Many brought their assistants, and, in addition, thousands of new clerks were demanded. They came by the trainload. Within a few weeks the great department structures were overcrowded, the vacant buildings of Washington were rapidly filled, and large apartment-houses in process of construction were taken over and used for war activities. Some of the big office buildings of the city were commandeered; the tenants were told to move out, and various branches of the government moved in. This was so with many apartment-houses in which people were living. And still the clerks came, and Uncle Sam cried for more. He soon found, however, that in order to use the employees he had to have places where he could put them to work, and he is now scheming to build them quarters where they can sleep overnight.

Building Offices.

The first question was to create office buildings in which the work could go on. Many of these have been built and acres more are in process of construction. The first to go up was that which now forms the main offices of the Council of National Defense. It was built within forty-five days. Nevertheless, it covers half as much ground as the National Library and its floor space is almost four acres. This was followed by a big two-story building for the Food Administration, which covers about twice as much ground as the Pension Building, famous as the largest brick building of the world. Then came the offices of the Fuel Administration, a double row of rooms running around a great court, with a front as large as that of the White House, and with a wall three times as long, and after that came the Ordnance building, on Virginia avenue. This has a front larger than that of the National Treasury, and it covers more ground than the great granite structure which houses the departments of the State, War and Navy. Nevertheless, it is nothing in comparison with the demands of the bureau by which it is filled and great buildings to accommodate the overflow are now almost completed.

The buildings I have described are all west of the White House on ground that was once a part of Davy Burns's farm, the old homestead of which was still standing when I came to Washington several decades ago. In addition, new buildings are going up in all parts of the city, and the greatest office building ever created in the United States will have been completed by the time you are reading this letter. It was built in less than four months, and that notwithstanding its ground floor is so large that you could put the National Capitol Building, the National Library Building and the State, War and Navy Building upon the same space and have something to spare. The building covers ten acres and it has in the neighborhood of thirty acres of floor space. It is made in three great units, with a heating plant in the center which fills the steam pipes running back and forth through this thirty acres and making every cubic inch of it warm. All of these buildings are of frame with walls of metal lathing nailed on to studding with building paper on each side. The lathing is covered with stucco, and the inside walls are a thick pasteboard with wood strips over their joints. The buildings have double floors, and when completed they look much like the better class of suburban residences or the stuccoed houses erected at seaside resorts. They are lighted by electricity and heated by steam. They are built to last only for the time of the war, but there is no reason why they should not be standing ten years from now. They have all gone up within the past six months and they are only a part of a large building programme which is still under way.



Barracks for 240 men in construction. At one camp 700 buildings were built at an average speed of forty minutes each.

Storage Buildings.

Take, for instance, the series of great storage buildings which are to be erected for supplies and munitions at certain terminal points. These are already begun. They are going up at the chief ports where the railways and ships come together, and where food and all sorts of supplies have to be kept until they can be sent off to Europe.

The buildings are different from those of the cantonments, and the structures here at Washington which I have described. They have to be carefully built and with special regard to their use. Those going up near New York will cost more than has been expended upon all these new buildings at the National Capitol. The amount will be $8,000,000, and that single unit will have more than one mile of piers and bulkheads. The structures will cover more than 200 acres. There will be 250 of them, and they will range in size from mere sheds to great warehouses.

We are building also special storage places for munitions and other war supplies. These are being erected near the great plants where the munitions are made. One unit, required to store high explosives, will cost $8,000,000.

Another great branch of building construction is in connection with the housing problem. The industrial demands of the war are enormous, and in order to get the right kind of expert help for the shipyards and other industrial plants we must have comfortable houses for the workmen. No matter how high the wages, the best men will not leave their homes to live in chicken coops and pig pens, as they have had to do in the suburbs of Bridgeport and others of the big munition centers, and men and women will not go where there are so few beds that they have to be rented in shifts and the mattresses never get cold. This has been the case at one of the great manufacturing centers. The truth is there is no shortage of labor in the United States, but there is a great shortage of housing facilities in the industrial centers where the war work is done. This has to be remedied, and Uncle Sam will soon have under way a large number of industrial cities. One of these already arranged for will cost $35,000,000. It will be built for the emergency shipping of Hog Island near Philadelphia. Another will be created near Newport News, and others will probably be built at sixty or seventy places, scattered here and there over the country. These cities will be laid out after the best of modern civic planning and they will continue to exist after the war is over as model industrial centers. Great Britain has already put more than $500,000,000 into such buildings, and it is said that she will have to spend at least $500,000,000 more.

Enormous Clerical Force.

Of somewhat the same nature are the new buildings planned for the rapidly increasing clerical force here at Washington. The city is now overcrowded and 20,000 more clerks will be added this year. The Council of National Defense has been asked to make immediate plans for buildings that will take care of 5000 clerks, and this will take eight or ten buildings as large as the new office buildings west of the White House. This is a hotel proposition. The employees must have rooms and baths, they must have parlors or reception halls and all the equipment of a big hotel. Each employee will want his own room, and 20,000 are coming.

And now let me say a word about the cantonment cities which Uncle Sam has already constructed. They have been built and paid for. Their cost was just about $134,000,000, and that was $16,000,000 less than the amount which Congress appropriated for their construction. The cost of each of these cities ran into the millions of dollars. Three cost more than $9,000,000 and the money spent on each of two others was upward of $10,000,000.

The military cities had to be erected in different parts of the country and under all sorts of physical conditions. In some places the ground was flat, in others hilly and in others it had to be drained. Camp Shelby, which is somewhere in Mississippi, covers an area of twelve good sized farms. It was a forest and the trees had to be cut and 180,000 stumps taken out before the city of 50,000 soldiers could begin to build.

It was not only necessary to build these cities, but they had to be built at once. It was June by the time Congress passed the enabling legislation for them, and they had to be ready by September. The work meant the bringing together of all sorts of material from the four quarters of the United States, its transportation to these thirty-two different centers, situated hundreds of miles apart, and the putting it into living quarters for more than 1,000,000 men. It meant the erection of hospitals and warehouses, of stables and administration buildings and quarters for officers and men. It meant hundreds of miles of plumbing and pumping equipment and other arrangements for sewer and water supply. At one camp the pumps had a capacity of more than 4,000,000 gallons of water per day, and this was carried through twenty-eight miles of pipes to the 10,000 faucets and hydrants in the military city. Another camp had twenty miles of sewers, and the roads of all the camps were so many they would have reached as far as from Boston to Chicago. The equipment included more than 2500 carloads of heating stoves and 350 carloads of cooking ranges, without taking into consideration the bakeries, which in many cases were so large that they could turn out 40,000 loaves of bread in one day.

Forty Minutes per Building.

The speed with which these cities were erected has never been equaled. At Camp Devens, Mass., for instance, the 1728 buildings making up the cantonment city were erected at the average rate of forty minutes per building. The whole city was constructed within eleven weeks. Twenty portable sawmills cut the lumber at the site to save hand sawing. The 20,000 doors and 70,000 windows required were made in mills throughout the country. In addition to the quarters for the men, the structures included twenty administration buildings, fifty-five storehouses and 331 stables. During the job 135 motor trucks and 200 wagons were used, and the work was so mobilized that lumber was shifted from the cars to the mill at the rate of 500,000 feet per day and carried by trucks from the machines to the buildings where it was needed. In this way more than 30,000,000 feet of lumber—enough to make a boardwalk a foot wide and an inch thick from San Francisco to the battlefields of France—were carried to the various units of the cantonment.

The organization and plans for all this work and also for other great building schemes which the government has now under way were created through the committee on emergency construction of the Council of National Defense. In order to give you some idea of these great undertakings and how they have been carried out I have had a talk with Maj. W. A. Starrett, the chairman of that committee. Maj. Starrett is one of the chief industrial officers of Uncle Sam's great labor army. A leading architect of New York City at the time the war broke out, he has been accustomed to dealing with large contracts, and he understands the building and labor conditions of the country. He had taken his training at Plattsburg and was expecting orders for France when he was called by the administration to serve here on this committee at Washington. The first subject that come before the committee was the cantonments. In reply to my questions regarding this, Maj. Starrett said:

Thirty-two Cities at Once.

"The problem was staggering. The government had to provide thirty-two great military cities and build them from the ground up. It had to gather the building materials from widely scattered parts of the United States, transport them to the places where they were needed and create the organization and plans for doing the work. Congress had decided to appropriate $150,000,000 for the purpose, and this vast sum of money must be efficiently and economically spent. The committee had to organize the working forces, and it needed the very best men of the country; for the job had to be done within a short space of time. The first thing was to make the contracts and plans. For this purpose we looked over the United States and called to our assistance the trained ex-

VALUABLE INFORMATION IN A NUTSHELL.

Soil and Plant Wisdom in Paragraphs. By Ernest Braunton.

Now is the time of all times to sow seeds of California wild flowers and no others will make so fine a show for so little money and care.

The new red sunflower is coming to be a strong favorite in local gardens. It is the same in other respects as the old yellow sort, but in varying shades of red.

Up-to-date snapdragons may now be had covering almost as wide a range of coloring as any flowers we have, from white to a red almost black, with yellow and orange.

The long-spurred columbines are far superior to the old sorts and have a far greater variety of coloring, blue, yellow, white, orange, lavender and other shades.

A fine climbing annual is Ipomea coccinea, and a Los Angeles dealer who is thoroughly reliable claims to have a superior hybrid known as "Cardinal climber."

The day is close at hand when we will no longer lose sewage in the sea, where recovery is impossible. It is the greatest waste from which our country suffers and should be stopped, for it costs us dearly.

Do not neglect to lime the soil this season. No garden exists in California but will be benefitted by such treatment and few there be anywhere that do not need it.

Keep the soil about trees deeply and constantly stirred. Nearly all roots need more air than they receive, so delve deeply, pulverize well and irrigate frequently and thoroughly.

Do not fertilize the garden very heavily in early winter, for the rains carry most of it away. Fertilize little and often and increase the amount as the rainy season closes.

Lime is absolutely essential to the activities of soil bacteria, and the soil is not a good medium for such activity until it has absorbed or combined with as much as it can.

The object of artificial manuring is to supply the deficiencies of the soil. Therefore in applying concentrated commercial fertilizers it is well to first ascertain the peculiar needs of the crops you are growing or about to grow.

The Los Angeles rose still continues to be a leader wherever grown and it is pleasing to note that it has found its way into every State in this country and to several foreign countries. Plant one or more at once.

Chayotes are just as good as any early summer squash, but not a "dawg-gone" bit better, nuther. But the vine makes a splendid summer growth for covering arbors, fences, etc.

An Iowa "Associate Professor in Soils" writes that wooden bedposts make good breakfast food. We agree; for one California poultryman fed sawdust until he hatched woodpeckers and chicks with wooden legs and some Iowa professors have wooden heads.

A seed is constructed for the sole purpose of developing a young plant and the embryo or germ is rich in plant food in a highly concentrated form, so that the new plant at first needs a proper physical condition of soil rather than the presence of plant food.

In deciduous trees nearly all the plant food of the leaves has gone into the wood before the leaves fall and is stored in the layer between the wood and the bark, the rising sap in spring taking it up again for use of the new growth.

If a soil consisted of spherical particles all of the same size, in a loose condition, the spaces would amount to nearly one-half the volume. Therefore pulverization allows of closer packing and packing is conducive to best growth. The surface alone should be very loose.

An application of any form of chalk or lime to sticky clay is beneficial in diminishing its stickiness, rendering it easy to till and fill with water. Pure clay does not make good bricks; sand must be added.

As a dark colored soil becomes hotter during sunshine than a light-colored one, it is desirable to introduce humus as an aid to early crops, for nothing will so darken soils as humus.

The greatest evaporation from a soil takes place when it grows a crop. For that reason keep the weeds out that the remaining plants may have all the moisture to minister to their needs.

Remember, a soil is never too wet by reason of its capacity for holding water. It is too wet through lack of drainage. Wherefore drainage and deep tillage are often necessary as a forerunner to good crops.

Neither does the wettest soil always supply the largest amount of water to crops. Peat and clay relatively yield the least and sandy silt the most to a growing crop. Add to the sandy silt a good quantity of humus and you have the ideal soil for general purposes.

The soil-heating effect of the sun is determined by the angle at which it strikes the earth. Note the angle at which solar heaters are placed and you will easily understand why lands sloping toward the southeast are sought for earliest spring crops.

The year 1917 was the severest trial on plants of any since our country has been thickly settled and well planted. For that reason the plant life shows its resourcefulness under the most adverse conditions as far as soil moisture is concerned. A study made now of vegetation which has received no artificial water supply will reveal the plants best suited to plant in the typical California garden.

A large part of the elements of plant food contained in soils is present in an unavailable condition and proper physical condition is the most potent factor in releasing these locked-up plant foods. The introduction of lime and humus works the more important necessary changes.

When prices are low for a crop it may not pay to force production too far. The last pound per acre costs more to produce than any other. If prices are high, therefore, forcing will pay whereas the same treatment with low prices may result in loss to the grower.

The ordinary chemical analysis does not furnish a measure of the soil's fertility; it but shows what plant food is therein contained. If, however, a light acid solution was employed it would correspond somewhat to that possessed by root sap, and thereby arrive at an analysis of what is at once available to crops.

As one approached Riverside from Los Angeles a few years ago he could see a stretch of land owned by the Arlington Heights Fruit Company where sections had grown from one to seven years crops of green manure, respectively. It was clearly noticeable how these cover crops continually and permanently darkened the color of the soil; the latter originally almost pure disintegrated granite.

WHY INDIA DOES NOT WANT HOME RULE.

Safe Loyalty. By Eleanor Maddock.

NOT more than twenty years ago, and even less, the appearance of an East Indian on the streets of our large cities excited curiosity and some comment. But suddenly—and over night as it were—we grew accustomed to rubbing shoulders with dark-skinned, impassive young men from India, dressed in uncomfortable and ill-fitting English clothes, who before the war were flocking in large numbers to America for the purpose of entering the various colleges and universities throughout the country.

By observing them closely it is noticed that they are, almost without exception, of the unmistakable Bengali type, natives of the province of Bengal; and, if questioned as to what city they came from, the reply will invariably be—Calcutta.

Nautch girls—Bombay.

Within the last few years, before the war began, these young Bengali students manifested, in addition to the legitimate object of seeking the educational advantages of a free country, decided tendencies towards intrigue, by forming themselves into more or less organized groups and whenever opportunity offered, from the platforms of women's clubs and various religious societies—to which many of them have been admitted—they read from carefully prepared notes, statistics relating to the appalling condition of India, where "millions" are supposed to be constantly dying of famine and disease through the wilful neglect and tyrannical oppression of the British government; meanwhile managing to convey a supercilious contempt for America, its people and customs, with an engaging subtlety peculiar to this type of oriental, of which the Bengali poet, Tagore—after he ran amuck under the intoxication of fame—was a striking example during his last lecture tour of this country.

Had these socialistic disturbers confined themselves to agitating "Home Rule for India," probably little notice would have been taken of their activities here, but when a center was discovered in San Francisco where they were publishing a seditious newspaper called the "Gadar," which was being used by the Germans in their treason propaganda of this country, then the American government took prompt action by arresting the editor, Ram Chandra, together with a number of his associates.

In these days of secret service intercommunication with the lands beyond the seas, it can hardly be regarded as a coincidence that almost simultaneously with the action taken in California, the Governor of Madras, India, issued an internment order for Mrs. Annie Besant, an Irish woman residing in India, of world-wide fame as a theosophical leader, who, some few years ago, allied herself with the natives of Bengal in an aggressive political Home Rule for India movement. As there is a decided element of German influence back of it Mrs. Besant's action was naturally regarded as disloyal to her country. More particularly as a seditious newspaper, which she owned and controlled, was widely circulated throughout Bengal. Literature emanating from the same source—be it said—has found its way into all of the Theosophical Society centers of America, from one of which, not so many weeks ago, an appeal was sent to President Wilson on behalf of India!

Glancing casually at the rather brief accounts of the above happenings among the momentous news with which the daily papers are filled, most readers would be inclined to pass them by with scant notice. But the fact that the executive heads of both America and Great Britain have seen fit to take the matter seriously, proves it to be of some importance, and so, of interest to the general public, and particularly to those who know India, and who saw something of the "game" as it was played there—as I did during the first year of the war.

Germany Takes Advantage of Intrigues.

Every country of any size or importance, has an internal disturbing element that, no matter what the existing form of government may be, is always against it. India is no exception as for years there have been hotbeds of intrigue in Bengal, with headquarters in Calcutta, of which, before the war, the government concerned itself but little so long as their activities were confined to ranting among themselves. But the Germans, however, were keen enough to see that here was fruitful soil in which to plant some of their disrupting forces and spread a propaganda of treason and rebellion over the rest of India and the Island of Ceylon. The sending of young Bengalis, as students, to the Pacific Coast is a rather expensive method of extending what the Germans must consider an important and far-reaching phase of their secret irritant system. This phase was undoubtedly intended to serve a double purpose, that of making use of the subtle self-interests of these natives to work upon the sympathies, and arousing the indignation of the people, wherever they could get a hearing, against British rule in India, and finally in the hatching of dangerous plots inimical to the lives and property of Americans.

Who the Bengalis Are.

Now, in passing, just a word as to who the Bengalis really are. The Province of Bengal, although covering a wide area, and densely populated, by no means represents India—quite the contrary, as will be explained. Strictly speaking the natives of this province are not of pure Hindu stock, but a mixture of the negroid types which inhabited the jungles of Lower India and the highly civilized Aryan-Hindus of the North who conquered this part of the country in the early centuries of India's history.

Their talent was literature, and a kind of poetic art is no doubt inherited from their Aryan forebears, but their extremely dark skin, and the strain of wild blood which makes them rebel against any form of government, is a throw-back to their negroid ancestors. These then, are the Bengalis, the only people in India who are clamoring for supremacy which they are quite unfitted to sustain.

You do not have to labor through Tod's "Annals of Rajisthan" or Flora Anna Steel's "India Through the Ages;" just glance through Kipling's "Letters of Marque," where briefly he depicts the bloody conflicts between the Hindus and Mohammedans, or the "Three Sacks of Chitor," the wonderful capital city of the Rajputs, where thousands of women of royal blood perished in the flames rather than to fall into the hands of the Moslems, in the days when all of Upper India literally ran with blood. A few pages will suffice to enlighten the most casual, as to why India has had enough—at least for a few generations—of "home rule."

Why India is Loyal.

By this I mean the real India, "The Land of Princes," represented by the rulers of the native states of Rajputana, of those comprising the vast territories of Northern, Central and of certain portions of Southern India, where, today, every Maharajah, Rajah and ruling chief is loyal to the British Raj, loyalty, however, that is never for a moment mistaken as disinterested—by those who know the self-centered Hindu—but, is maintained because the Hindus recognize its power as the only thing that protects them from the hordes beyond the borders, and from each other. They know that if it were removed, the Gaekwar of Baroda, for example, would immediately war upon his neighbors, the Maharajahs of Indore and Jaipur; the great Mohammedan Nizam of Hyderabad would send his armies into Rajputana—as did his ancestors—to invade the territory of the proud Maharana of Udaipur. And it is not improbable that all would combine to enslave the natives of Bengal—whom they have always regarded with contempt.

Kipling, indeed, must have been inspired when he penned the lines—"East is East, and West is West, and never the twain shall meet." That sums up the truth of a great problem in a nutshell. For India is a land where western ideas of democracy are slow to take root; the people do not understand them. They love the traditions of royalty that have come down to them through the ages. Their inherent instinct and desire, therefore, is to be ruled over by a stable power, but it must be one that never so much as lays a finger on their great religious and social caste system that spreads, like a gigantic web, from the Himalayas to Cape Cormorin. England learned this secret of successful government in the crucial test of the Indian mutiny—the secret that has made possible all her subsequent benefic rule of India.

When the Germans were endeavoring to stir up trouble among the high caste Hindus and Mohammedans, they must have overlooked the "secret"—if they ever knew it. They intruded too near the edge of the food caste, an important factor in the Hindu religion, which forbids the touching, much less the killing or eating of animal food. This is also, in a measure, a factor of the Mohammedan religion as well, for while the latter have no scruples in slaughtering and devouring the sacred cow of the Hindus, their Koran teaches that pig is an unspeakable abomination, to the extent that they can hardly endure the proximity of the German whose diet consists largely—or did, of this unclean animal. They also made the mistake of intruding into the territory of the Sikh for they had no means of measuring the gratitude of this fine upstanding race to England for her Herculean task in reclaiming their country—the vast Punjab, and parts of the arid wastes of the Great Indian Desert, from the ravages of drought and famine by a system of irrigation canals, that from a height over the distributing center at Sewan, resemble the canals on the planet Mars. This work is a monument—not only to hundreds of brave engineers who gave their lives to its accomplishment during the unhealthful monsoons, and under the fierce rays of a tropical sun—but to British rule in India.

True Story of "Plague and Famine."

The Bengalis say that "millions are dying in their country through the neglect of a tyrannical government." Well, two years ago I was taken by a friend in charge of the Government Improvement Works into the midst of what was the plague and cholera infested districts of Burra Bazar, Calcutta, where, during epidemics, thousands of natives did die like rats. The work of improving the conditions was going on—but slowly—not due, however, to the stress of war, but strangely enough to the fanatical resistance of the people themselves. In some cases they attacked the workmen, who had literally to drag them out of reeking holes and passages. I saw seemingly interminable crooked streets, into whose noisome depths the sun never shone, where the buildings had been torn down, and were being replaced by new ones with proper sanitation, so that in the future—whatever may be said to the contrary—the public can dismiss the harrowing tales of "plague and famine in Calcutta," as fiction.

It is an old story now, for all the world has heard about the splendid part that India is taking in this great war, but it is a story that will bear repeating—the story of the nine Maharajahs of independent states who offered themselves for active service in France and Belgium, to command their own trained troops; of the Maharajah of Bikanir who has won distinction with his famous camel corps—the "oont-logue" or camel-folk, trained on the arid Indian Desert—that by its tireless and patient patrolling of the Egyptian Desert, has more than once saved the Suez Canal during the Turkish raids; of the contribution to the war fund of their state jewels and money, the Maharajah of Mysore alone giving fifty lakhs of rupees, or $1,500,000. There was His Highness, the Agha Khan, educated at Cambridge University, England, who practically controls 60,000,000 Mohammedans as their spiritual head; who, so well did he know his people, offered not only the services of all those who were fit, but his own as well—to fight for the protection of the British Raj in India. However, the influence of this remarkable man was considered of such inestimable value, that he was asked to remain in India for the purpose of handling

A FIGHT THAT AMERICA IS LOSING.

Japanese Long-headedness. By Richard Langdon.

NO ONE can travel over South Africa without realizing the extent to which America is failing to embrace a great opportunity. We are busy with the Great War but we ought not and must not be too busy to look ahead. Some of the present peace talk by Germany is prompted by the fear that the world's markets may be closed to her, and yet at the present moment we have an opportunity that we have never had before and we are allowing the Japanese to seize the chance.

South Africa, or more correctly the Union of South Africa, comprises a huge area and is peopled by a far more numerous and varied collection of humans than is generally realized. Very recently one business man in New York asked if Johannesburg were a suburb of Cape Town and another remarked, when the possibilities of the South African market were explained to him, that he "had enough to do right here." Such ignorance is fatal and such an attitude is almost national treachery. We may not urgently require the market now but we shall some time, and then it may be too late. A market once lost is proverbially hard to regain.

Just a few figures may be useful. The area of the four provinces, i.e.: Cape Colony, Transvaal, Natal and the Orange Free State is over 473,000 square miles and a reference to the map shows that there are huge tracts outside these divisions. Rhodesia alone is vast in extent. In the four provinces there is a population of something like 6,000,000 if we count natives and whites together. We are entitled to do this for they are all consumers. The native is a very large consumer of some of our products. He does not sit around in a few beads under a palm tree, but takes a very active and important part in the industrial life of the country. To mention but one industry—mining—it could not be worked without his assistance. Here he earns good wages and he spends them.

We were taught at school that Africa was "the Dark Continent." It might have been then. It is not now. Jim, as the native is often called, has learned to appreciate the blessings of civilization or rather that section of them that appeals to his still uneducated tastes. He and his family clothe themselves in the products of modern looms, they plow with modern implements and they recreate themselves with the simpler civilized musical instruments. A certain amount of stress has been laid on the native section of the population for it is the one that is most easily overlooked unless one is brought into close contact with it. Many men are making large money in the "up-country" stores. They may be, and often are, far away from any township, but they generally carry many thousands of dollars worth of general goods. Nearly every item has to be imported, for at present South Africa has not seen fit to develop the industrial side of her national life. The mines and agriculture furnish her wealth, and while money can be made so easily by these means no one is inclined to put down expensive plants for manufacturing purposes.

The large Indian population in Natal may be mentioned and for the present left. Their standard of life is higher and their consumption of manufactured goods greater.

When we come to the white section of the people we find that money is plentiful and everywhere there is a great demand for every possible form of modern article of utility and luxury. A visit to the great gold center and commercial metropolis of the Transvaal — Johannesburg — speedily indicates the very rapid strides that have been made in recent years. Corner House, while not so lofty as some of the larger buildings found in our country, is but one of the very many steel structures now springing up in that town and elsewhere.

Prior to the war it was only natural that by far the larger part of the trade was done with England, but the restricted output of the English factories and the lack of freight has made it very hard to obtain good from there. Many goods had to be obtained from somewhere.

Japan was wide awake, she realized this, and very soon after the war was in full swing she sent over to South Africa special agents to study the peculiarities of the market and the most easily filled needs. Today she is filling those needs. She is sending her own ships to transport the goods and she is securing a grip on the market. South Africa would have been glad to purchase from us but we were not ready to supply. South Africa is not anxious to increase the hold of the Asiatic on the markets for she has a most serious problem in her midst created by the importation of indentured Indians to work the sugar plantations. These have obeyed the very earliest biblical injunction. They have been fruitful and multiplied and they are an economic menace. To repeat, Africa does not want to magnify this menace; she would welcome us.

The latest figures available show that before the war Japan did a larger trade with South Africa in some commodities and was a very serious rival in some others. Since then she has increased her field of operations and today she is sending over goods that had to be specially manufactured to meet the market. It will be enough to mention one or two lines, and these not the most important by any means. Before the war no glass bottles were imported from Japan. South Africa wanted them and wanted them badly. Japan made inquiries and sent out some shipments. They were not quite right for the markets, she altered them and now sends not only bottles but other glass ware.

Within the last few months there was a running advertisement in the press. It called attention to "the large shipment of gramaphones just received from Japan." An inspection of these demonstrated that they were equal in every respect to those of western origin.

American machinery is largely used but there are sections that Germany supplied. She is hoping to renew her contract; she will unless we wake up. Japan would like to have a footing in this section of the market also; given time enough she will.

Clothing of every description, piece goods, especially cottons and woolens; house furnishings, foods and articles of general domestic utility, together with goods needed in the field and office, could and should be sent in increasingly greater bulk from this country. Are we going to do it or are we to wait till another has usurped our place?

We are busy with a great war. Japan is too; but she lies so far on the outer fringe of things and she is so protected from actual hostilities that her internal life can go on undisturbed. We cannot and must not allow the children that we are fighting for to suffer because we are too slack to appreciate our duty to the white race. While we fight we must scheme ahead. South Africa would welcome us. She waits to welcome us. We must get better acquainted before it is too late.

Animals Killed off by Man.

There are still living men who have shot not dozens but hundreds of "passenger pigeons" in a single day. Sixty years or so ago this bird was far more common in the United States than wild ducks are today.

When it migrated the flights darkened the sky. A single flight has been estimated to number over 2,000,000 of birds.

A couple of years ago the last passenger pigeon died in Cincinnati at the age of 27 years. A passenger pigeon was quite a different looking bird from any other species of pigeon. It had a long tail and was, in all, nearly three-quarters of a yard long. It was so called because of its migratory habits, it being a bird of passage. For the fifteen years previous to the death of the Cincinnati bird there was a standing reward of $1000, it is said, for a mate for this last of the race; yet the offer produced no response. The passenger pigeon is now absolutely extinct, it seems, and with its passing went one of the most beautiful and useful of birds.

The term "extinct animals" conveys to most of us the notion of a creature like the mammoth or mastodon, which went out thousands upon thousands of years ago. We seldom realize that there are whole species which have vanished in recent years, and that there are at present various species "trembling in the balance."

The last great auk, for instance, was killed no longer ago than 1844 by a seal hunter on Eldey, a skerry or rock island off the Icelandic coast, and it is little more than a century ago, namely, in 1812, that the last of the British great auks vanished from Papa Westray in the Hebrides.

Another inhabitant of the northern seas that disappeared quite recently was Steller's sea-cow. When Behring's expedition was caught in the ice near the straits that bear his name his crew lived mainly on the flesh of this huge but stupid creature.

It was larger than an elephant, full-grown specimens being as much as twenty-five feet long, and weighing five or six tons apiece. It had no teeth at all, their place being taken by great horny plates.

The very last of these harmless monsters is said to have been killed by a Russian whaler in the summer of 1848.

"Extinct as the dodo" has become a proverb. As most persons are aware, the dodo was a large wingless bird that flourished in the island of Mauritius. Since its flesh was most edible and it had no means of defense or flight, it was soon exterminated. Today even a perfect skeleton would be priceless.

The South African quagga is quite gone. As recently as 1839 vast herds roamed in Cape Colony. The last living specimen recorded was seen in Portuguese territory about thirty years ago. The animal seen in zoos which is usually called a quagga is really the Burchell zebra, a very different creature.

Not long ago there died in the National Zoological Park in Washington an animal known as the zebra wolf, which had been a member of the collection since 1902.

It was a marsupial, or pouched animal, and had curious zebra-like stripes across its back. Whether this was the first or the last of its race no one seemed to know. At any rate it had no duplicate anywhere else.

The white-headed buzzard is said to be quite extinct, and that within the past twenty years. The sea otter is so rare that a single skin will fetch $1500. It is found only upon a part of the wildest stretch of the Alaskan coast.

The buffalo is not quite extinct, for there is a small herd left in Canada. The American prong-horn antelope is approaching the end of its existence.

Birmingham is the headquarters of the glass-eye trade in England, and that city has brought its manufacture of this particular article to great perfection. Eyes are sent to all parts of the world.

A Pennsylvania coal company reached all the way to the trenches in France to get a witness in a compensation case. Dr. James Thomas, who went with the Canadian forces to the front nearly a year ago, treated Dominic Ambrosia, an Oneida laborer, whose widow claims compensation.

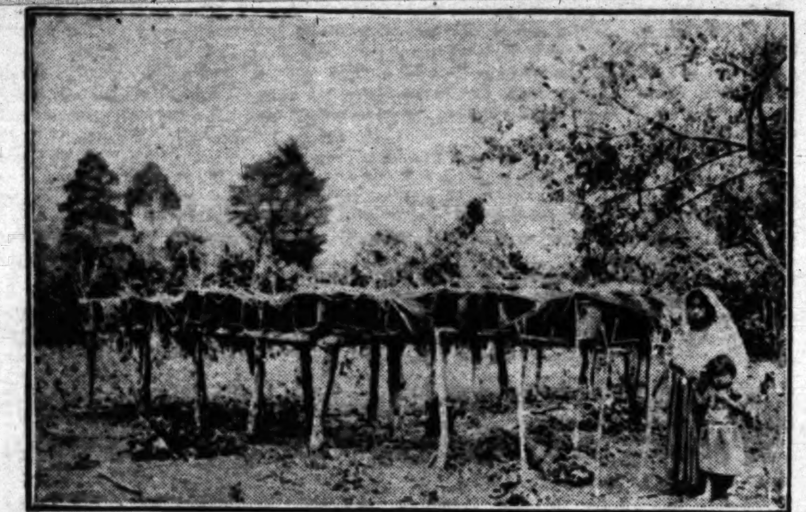
BUSY BEES HELP TO WIN THE WAR.

Eat More Honey. By a Special Contributor.

THE Department of Agriculture is working assiduously to increase the honey production for 1918. This measure is advocated in order to assist in conserving the nation's sugar supply. The professional beekeeper is being encouraged in every possible way and is earnestly urged to employ every advantage to insure a record-breaking honey crop.

Many years ago, before progressive and enterprising people of temperate countries established a trade with the tropics, and so came to depend upon the importation of cane sugar, honey was much more widely used as a food commodity than it is at present. Today there are persons living in the United States who never, from year's end to year's end, grace their table with honey, though as a wholesome and toothsome substitute for jams, jellies and marmalades it has no equal.



These primitive beehives, made of four pine boards, are used by the Indians in the mountains of Guatemala. The honey is sold for about 10 cents a pint.

Farther back in the world's history than any one can now remember, men with rude clubs prowled around rocky crevices and tha hollows of trees in search of game. Sometimes they stumbled upon a honey deposit and the more venturesome tasted it, experimentally and half fearfully. Upon discovering that this sweet, sticky substance was altogether luscious and brought no harm to them, they searched for it quite as diligantly as they hunted for game. Favored, indeed, was he who found the treasure. In spite of stings from angry bees—stings even modern and expert beemen are subject to—they secured the sweet and hastened gleefully away with it.

From the Bee Tree to the Hive.

Natives of Palestine, Africa, Asia, South and Central America gather wild honey to this day. One South American country, Peru, finds it in sufficient quantities to export. In the history of the United States stories are related of the pioneer's delight upon discovering a bee tree and his quick appropriation of its precious stores.

No very long time elapsed between the discovery of the bee tree, with its priceless wild honey, and the man-made hive. In many lands man enjoyed it so keenly that he did not wish to be dependent on its discovery; he wished rather to have it at hand should he grow honey hungry, and hence the introduction of bee culture, which today has grown to impressive proportions. Several thousand individuals, with homes located in every part of the United States, are keeping bees. The majority probably pursue beekeeping in order to swell the family exchequer, though a large number do so because they derive a deal of pleasure from it and find it a thoroughly worth-while hobby to ride.

Any one who lives in the country can indulge in an apiary if he desires. Within the confines of the modern city, however, where a handful of ground is at premium, the question of beekeeping is far more perplexing. The average suburbanite escapes, apparently, insurmountable difficulties, which bob up disconcertingly to confront those who dwell nearer the heart of town. But a persistent person with a live ambition for an apiary will find a way by utilizing the back part of a city lot, or, if this is out of the question, he may try out a bee colony on the roof of his house, and even under these conditions, which may seem totally adverse, success is possible.

Unfortunately, the amateur beekeeper rarely succeeds in obtaining from the bees their maximum of honey. An efficient beekeeper is a thoroughly trained individual, and usually has a number of years of valuable experience behind him—years which have enabled him to attain his pinnacle as a valuable producer in the honey market. These are the professionals, and it is this class that Uncle Sam is endeavoring to reach at the present time.

These men are being importuned to rustle up the unproductive colonies of amateurs and buy them. The government feels that in the face of the actual sugar shortage it would be a poor time indeed to undertake the training of new or amateur beekeepers. Honey is needed too badly. Furthermore, Uncle Sam figures that if professionals will handle the nation's apiaries the end of 1918 will find a honey crop that will far surpass that of 1917, even doubling it.

Spreading the Gospel of Honey.

Dr. E. F. Phillips, who is in charge of bee culture in the Department of Agriculture, states that there are now ten men in the field investigating conditions relative to bee culture. They journey from bee farm to bee farm in the different States delivering their message—the urgent need of quantities of honey.

From the Far West come the greatest hopes. One of the largest bee farms in the United States is located in California and boasts 2000 colonies. The usual size averages from 200 to 400 colonies. Uncle Sam's experimental station embraces but sixty colonies. A single bee colony in the course of a year will produce between twenty-five and thirty pounds of comb honey, or between forty and fifty pounds of extracted honey—that is, assuming, of course, that the colony is capably managed.

As many as 100 colonies can be kept in one apiary, but apiaries, Dr. Phillips maintains, should be two miles apart. tI is always desirable to have these colonies surrounded by fields of flowers from which they can derive nectar. There are two varieties of natural honey, floral or normal, and honeydew or abnormal. Floral honey is made from nectar, the sweet liquid which bees suck with their long tongues from the hearts of the blossoms. Honeydew honey is a sweetish deposit left on leaves of plants by insects. The honey remains in the bee's honey sac and undergoes a certain transformation or "ripening," which is completed in the cells of the comb.

After a trip abroad, however, worker bees return to the hive laden, not only with honey, but pollen and propolis. The pollen is gathered on the hairs of their bodies and put into the tiny pollen baskets on their legs. Pollen is an important food for immature bees. Propolis is bee glue and is employed mainly in making the hive impervious to water, though occasionally the bees use it to strengthen the comb's edges. Propolis comes from gums which ooze from bushes and trees. The wax, which is used so freely by the bee, is secreted from certain glands on the body of the insect. To make a pound of wax it is necessary for the bee to use several pounds of honey, and during the actual process of production the hive is kept at a high temperature.

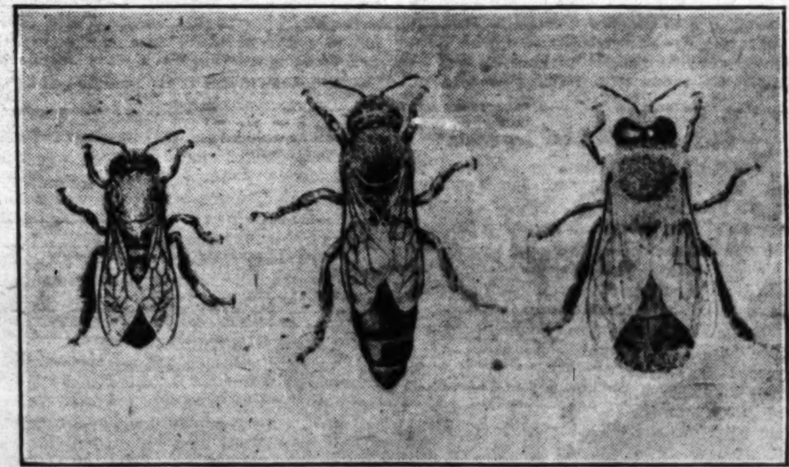
During the winter months Bees, unlike mere insects, refuse to hibernate. They are usually busy keeping warm. When the hive temperature falls to 57 deg. Fahrenheit bees cluster. When the weather is very cold there is an intense activity in the center, caused by the bees generating heat. The colder the weather the more incessant the muscular activity on the part of the bees, though those bees on the outer rim of the clustered mass are comparatively quiet. In their zeal for maintaining warm living quarters the bees may create a temperature of 90 deg. or above. Too high a temperature will develop winter brood-rearing; which is bound to result disastrously, as brood-rearing normally never starts until the season has advanced far enough to permit frequent flights into the open.

Bees Must be Kept Warm.

A good beekeeper will take every precaution to keep the bees as warm as possible. He will place the hive in an area sheltered from the wind, see that the hive is double-walled and protected by packing and that the bees have sufficient food. Bees that have to work hard to keep the hive warm soon become exhausted and the old bees easily succumb to death. The Department of Agriculture estimates that at the very least calculation one-tenth of the bee colonies of the country are lost each winter. Not infrequently beekeepers who are novices at the business lose half their bees. It is quite possible to reduce all the losses to less than 1 per cent. Bees are peculiarly constituted in that they are powerless to recover lost vitality. Dr. Phillips compares them to minute dry batteries in their inability to recuperate after exhaustion.

The beginning of 1918 finds bee manufactories working twenty hours a day to meet the increased demand for bee equipment. The professional beekeeper is determined to do his bit, not only because it is to his own interest to do so, but also because he can in that way very materially assist Uncle Sam. There is no fear of overproduction; the sugar shortage precludes all danger of that.

Approximately one-fifth of the sugar consumed in the United States under normal conditions is grown here. During the coming year the sugar cannot be produced in larger quantities in this country, and that normal supplies from abroad reach our shores is improbable. It is for this reason that the bees will have an exceptionally busy season. Honey has ever been known as a wholesome and nutritious food. In reality it is predigested sugar, and so is often prescribed by physicians for patients suffering from severe digestive disturbance. A tablespoonful of honey weighs a fraction over an ounce and equals in actual food value 100 calories.



The small bee is a worker, the one with the very slender body the queen, the large fat lazy looking one a drone.

Honey as a Substitute.

Honey is too expensive to act entirely as a substitute for sugar. If it were not so high it would be quite feasible to replace sugar with honey. There is a story afloat which avers that Mr. Hoover takes honey in his tea, evidently giving it the preference as a sweetener. Bakers use honey in cakes that would lose their freshness and moisture if sugar was used. In its normal substitution honey is used instead of jams, jellies and sirups. The average family, according to Dr. Phillips, probably uses annually two and a half pounds of honey per person. The average beekeeper's family will consume in the same time 300 or more pounds.

The Department of Agriculture is advocating a marked decrease in the production of comb honey and a steady increase in extracted honey. Extracted honey greatly facilitates the work of the bee, and in these days of pure food laws the old objection to extracted honey—adulteration—does not hold good. Also it is less expensive.

Bees are intensely interesting creatures. They have senses that are quite different from those of man. For instance, it has been said by many authorities that bees smell with their antennae, and that their sense of smell is very superior to the same sense in man.

Von Buttell-Roepen, an entomologist of eminence, has said that various odors play a highly important role in the world of the bee. The honey bee has half a dozen distinct odors to learn before he is regarded as an efficient citizen. These are the individual odors by which he is able to distinguish his companions, one from another; the hive odor; the queen odor, an odor so unmistakable that her majesty is never by any chance taken for any one less royal; the family odor, the drone odor and an odor for those bees whose task it is to transport wax scales. There is no perfectly satisfactory experimental evidence to substantiate this assumption, but many scientists of note feel that they have enough proof to use this as a working hypothesis.

Differentiated by Odor.

Dr. N. O. McIndoo of the Department of Agriculture thinks it probable that the bees that work abroad in the field emit an odor differentiating them from the comb builders, nurse bees or those that secrete wax. In fact, each one of these classes may have its own peculiar odor. Of all the odors, the hive odor is by far the most important. It is upon the hive odor that the social life of a bee colony depends. It is analogous to the nest odor as it exists among ants. The true odor is made up of a combination of other odors, individual, queen, drones, frames, combs, walls of hive, etc.

As a rule, and under normal conditions, every colony of bees has a queen. There are queenless colonies, however, but in them the bees are easily annoyed and give sufficient evidence of high-strung natures and irritable dispositions, and the workers never accomplish their tasks with the same degree of efficiency shown in the queen-right colony. The hive odor is found in the hairs of the bodies of the bees.

Both queen and drones of a hive are the elite of the colony and they often choose to disregard odors. If a queen, by some mistake, enters the wrong hive it takes her an astonishingly short time to become aware of the fact, ignore odors though she may. Such a queen, unless she beats a very swift

A Frank Admission.

SENATOR CHARLES B. HENDERSON of Nevada smiled when reference was made to the beauty of frank admissions. He said he was reminded of an incident along that line.

A charming young girl, who lives in a town called Tremont, recently went to an adjacent city to visit some friends. While there she was induced to take part in a bazar, and was put in charge of the confectionery booth. Eventually a middle-aged man was led that way.

"They tell me that I must buy some chocolates," he smilingly remarked to the fair visitor, picking up a box of the confectionery. "How much is this?"

"Five dollars, sir," answered the girl, without any visible evidence of conscientious pangs.

"Um," thoughtfully returned the victim, glancing from the chocolates to the girl, "aren't you a little dear?"

"Well," coyly rejoined the charming one, "that's what all the Tremont boys say."—[Philadelphia Telegraph.

"How's the Brown account?"

"Well, I don't know whether you'll rejoice or not at my success with Brown."

Good but Vague Advice.

A CAPTAIN of industry was addressing the students of a college.

"All my success in life," he said proudly, "all my enormous financial prestige, I owe to one thing only—pluck. I want all you young men to take that for your motto—pluck, pluck, pluck!"

He paused impressively, and a small student seated in the front row queried:

"Yes, sir, but won't you please tell us how many and whom did you pluck?"—[Harper's Magazine.

Had that Appearance.

CONGRESSMAN HARRY H. DALE of New York remarked in the lobby of a Washington hotel that it is sometimes quite safe to judge by appearances, and told the following illustration:

One afternoon a woman was passing down the street when suddenly a little girl dashed from the front door of a neighboring house. "Oh, Mrs. Smith," exclaimed the girl. "What do you think? We have got a brand new baby at our house!"

"Is that so, Bessie?" responded Mrs. Smith, with an appropriate smile as she patted the little girl on the head. "Is he going to stay with you?"

"Why, yes, I think so," reflectively answered Bessie. "It's got its things off."—[Philadelphia Telegraph.

Too Great a Change.

MAYOR THOMPSON of Chicago was talking about the petition for a dry Christmas that was submitted to him in December.

"I grant," he said, "that a dry Christmas would have saved Chicago some millions of dollars, but wouldn't it have been too startling a change for us?

"I told one of my petitioners a story about a Scotchman who was dying. Three of his old cronies gathered about his bed, and one of them said:

"'Jock, the doctor tells us you can't live out the night, and so we've come to drink one last glass of whisky with you before you go."

"But Jock shook his head.

"'Na, na,' he said. 'Na, na. Do you think I'll enter heaven with the smell of whisky on my breath?'

"'But, Jock,' said his friend, 'if you don't smell of whisky when you go to heaven they won't know you there.'"—[Washington Star.

A Low Opinion.

"THE real German opinion of Russian democracy, if we could only get at it, would suggest to us the story of Haystack's horse."

The speaker was Frank A. Vanderlip, chairman of the war saving certificate committee. He went on:

"Hen Haystack met up with Cal Cornsilk in front of the postoffice one day, and he stopped his turnout and said:

"'Ye hain't lookin' for a good hoss, Cal, be ye?'

"'I dunno. Why?' says Cal.

"'This here mare's for sale,' says Hen. 'You know me, Cal. I'm always ready for a hoss trade. Do ye want the mare or don't ye? She's a beauty. Take her or leave her.'

"Cal studied the mare a moment. Then he said:

The Sailor's Joke.

A NAVAL officer told a sea story at a banquet.

"Sailors have a strong sense of humor," he said. "A certain young sailor was just back from a nine-month cruise. He celebrated his return in a great many bars, and when the last bar closed he danced jovially down the street with all his pockets filled with bottles of beer, and waving a bottle in either hand above his head.

"'Boys,' he said, 'it's disgraceful what I'm going to say for a sailor, but it's the truth—I have a horror of water!'"—[Washington Star.

A Victim of Fate.

"WHEN I began business," said the plutocrat wearily, "I made a solemn vow that when I had made an even million I would quit."

"But you've made that many times over," said the other man, "and still you are accumulating."

"That's the curse of it. Whenever I think I've made an even million I find on figuring it up it's either a little more or a little less, and I've got to renew the heartbreaking struggle." And the unfortunate man sighed heavily.—[Boston Transcript.

Some Speed.

A TRAINLOAD of newly drafted men reached their cantonment late in the afternoon. By the time they had passed through the receiving station and the hands of the doctors it was nearly midnight. Some time since a certain esteemed citizen who held down a government position returned to his home on a visit and passed around among his envious friends.

"You are looking fine, Jim," remarked a friend, as they stopped to light a cigar at Jim's expense. "Your new line seems to agree with you."

"Yes," cheerfully assented the other. "It might be a whole lot worse."

"By the way, Jim," asked the friend a few minutes later. "How many people work in your department?"

"I don't know exactly," was the smiling reply of Jim; "but, roughly guessing, I should say about one-third of them."—[Philadelphia Telegraph.

To Cut Prices.

EX-MAYOR MITCHEL of New York was talking at a dinner about war prices.

"These war prices are staggering," he said. "They're very hard to combat, too. When a man comes along with a simple, easy method for bringing war prices down to the pre-war level, his idea is apt to be about as valuable as Josh's.

"Josh said at the club one day:

"'Can't I help you, son?'

"'I wish you would, father,' said Willie. 'I've got an algebra problem here, and it's awful hard.'

"'Algebra, eh?' The father looked rather dubious. 'Well, let's see her.'

"So little Willie handed her over. The problem read:

"'If A does a piece of work in eleven days, and B does it in two days, how long would it take them to do it together?'

"The old man frowned. Then he said:

"'What makes you think this is algebra, boy?'

"'Because,' said Willie, 'it's got an A and a B in it.'

"His father frowned harder than ever.

"'Well,' he finally said, 'the only proper thing to do in a case of this kind is, of course to fire A.'"—[Washington Star.

Why Spiders Fight.

When two or more spiders fight there is usually a good reason for the furious attack and vigorous defense that always follow.

It is not generally known that after a certain time has elapsed spiders become incapable of spinning a web through lack of sufficient material. The glutinous substance from which the spider spins its slender web is limited; therefore, spiders cannot keep up the construction of new snares for their prey when the old are destroyed.

Very often when the web material is exhausted, they are able to avail themselves of the web-producing powers of their younger or more fortunate neighbors, and this they do without any scruple whatsoever.

As soon as a spider's web-constructing material has become exhausted and its last web destroyed, it usually sets out in search of another home, and, unless it should find one that is unoccupied, a battle usually ensues, which ends only with the retreat or death of the invader or defender.

Such a struggle is intensely interesting, and will reveal some wonderful tactics and skill in spider warfare. The invader usually comes off victorious, although in some cases the defender offers such a stiff fight that it is able to hold its own in spite of the attack of the intruder, which is in desperate straits.

One curious fact is that the web material will increase after so long a period, and the spider will spin a net in which to snare its many varieties of prey in the form of different species of insects.

Spiders that are very successful in capturing food are often set upon by other spiders which have for some reason not been as successful as their neighbor.

Recently 100,000 dozen eggs were landed in Wellington, New Zealand, from California, and sold readily in that market at 54 cents a dozen.

Are We Descendants of Jeremiah?

and eventually the Saxon race itself Domesday Book reveals this, and what little was left undone was cleaned up later in short order.

Several years ago Dr. John Rhys, principal of Jesus College, Oxford, took cognizance of this Anglo-Saxon myth in the following words:

"English is the language of the Engle, not of the Saxon. Then when you come to the question of race, one finds on inquiry in almost every group of educated people in England that the Saxon is conspicuous by his absence. One man is, for instance, Anglian, another of Celtic descent—Welsh, or Cornish, Irish or Scotch—and another is of Norse or Norman origin, not to mention a sprinkling of Dutch, both Nether and High. What then has become of the Saxon? On the whole, one is left to conclude that he must be an excellent laborer, a good judge of beer, and a most useful member of society under the superintendence of the Engle and the Celt."

Authority might also be quoted showing that the Engle also had received his quietus just as rigidly as the Saxon, and a recent book published in England showed that with the exception of two counties the very names of the inhabitants were overwhelmingly Celtic in origin; and the mild jollying of the college dons might be multiplied to show the absurdity of this Anglo-Saxon myth. As far the United States of America one may scan the pages of history and find infinitesmal comfort if one is seeking to support this British-Israel theory.

Twelve of the men who signed the Declaration of Independence were of Celtic stock, John Barry, the father of the American Navy, was an Irishman; Paul Jones, who was the scourge of the sea to the English power, was a Scotchman; and Jeremiah O'Brien, who won the first naval victory of the Revolution, was also a Celt.

Of the trusted associates of Washington, the men of Celtic race were most noted: Gens. John Sullivan, Stephan Moylan, Anthony Wayne, Andrew Lewis, Roche Fermory, John Stark, Edmund Hand, James Clinton, Rutherford, Thompson, Irving, Butler and Richard Montgomery. Henry Knox, an Irishman, fought in every battle with Washington and was his first Secretary of War. The Demosthenes of the Revolutionary period, Patrich Henry, was a Celt, and three-fourths of the patriotic army was made up of Celts, and a few English. In a list of 100 names, practically all of Washington's generals, sixty are non-English, and of these the large majority were Scotch-Irish or Irish.

Celtic Blood Dominates.

In the Continental Congress of 1776 were eleven members of Scotch blood. In the Constitutional Convention that sat at Philadelphia, 1787, twelve of the members were Scotch and three Irish. When the independent State governments were formed, after the Declaration of Independence, the Scotch-Irish gave the first government to New York, Delaware, North and South Carolina; to Pennsylvania they gave her war governor; to Virginia, not only her great war governor but the civil leader, Patrick Henry, who supported by his Scotch and Irish brethren first carried and then held Virginia for the cause of independence.

Then, too, of the occupants of the presidential chair eleven have been of Celtic stock, and with the incumbent a round dozen are to be credited up to Scotch or Irish or an intermingling of both these Celtic strains. Not less than 200 men of the same race have served in the United States Senate—a roll that, for the most part, is one of honor and marking a high standard of ability. To mention Celts who distinguished themselves during the Civil War would be wearisome—their name is legion: but it will not do to forget Gen. James Shields, the hero of Chapultepec and conqueror of "Stonewall" Jackson, Phil Kearny, Phil Sheridan, John A. Logan and Ulysses S. Grant the greatest of them all.

The same story may be told regarding the justices of the Supreme Court as well as the courts of subordinate jurisdiction. In invention, too, in the arts, and as poets and philosophers we also will find that it has been, and is today, the men of the Celtic strain that are doing constructive work in and for this nation. Not they alone; far from that. But looking beneath the surface we may realize that this American nation is sui generis. It is made up of all strains of blood, but the Anglo-Saxon was gobbled up when he was not killed off centuries ago; and as he cannot be found in England it is rather absurd to expect to find this mocking-bird of racial twittering in this melting [illegible] of the nations.

The Jewish Republic.

But the Jews of the Old World do not apin the Baconian theory, although they go long on ciphers, and cryptograms, etc.; but they stand loyal to Shakespeare for did he not ask "What's in a name? A rose by any other name would smell as sweet." And so, say the British-Israelites, it matters not whether Anglo-Saxons or Celts the present English people are in possession of the vast territories promised by God to Israel, as distinguished from the two tribes comprising Judah. And Judah is within sight of her restoration, to be welcomed as brothers and re-established in the Holy Land.

But the Jews of the old world do not appear to have been bitten by the British-Israel bug. They do not differentiate between the one branch of the race that has been favored of God, and the other branch that has borne the burden of untold suffering throughout the ages. To the orthodox Jew the establishment of the race in its old glory in Palestine, with Jerusalem again the center of the religious thought of the world, with temple worship restablished, and the gates of Zion lifted up that her people—her very own, the chosen of God may enter in with tears that burst the very heart; ah, this is a picture of pity, of glory, of splendor that appeals to very many. So shall God be justified, and the despised Jew after all his persecutions, his miseries, rewarded for his steadfastness in proclaiming in the face of untellable tyranny the One God whom he worshiped, and all that is to be implied by an enlightened faith.

But there is a very large and influential body of Jews scattered over the world, who have developed by the very forces opposed against them many characteristics that give them a dominance over their Gentile brethren. And the Gentile continues to hate though without any longer the power to carry his hate to extremity. The words of the old prophets come to these with different meaning. Are they not the leaven that is going to leaven the whole lump? Is it not their destiny—the will of God that they should be scattered among the nations and remain so scattered, and educate the nations in those abilities they have developed under the rod, and that has already given to the world some of the greatest names in the arts, the sciences, the philosophies, and even in the art of war. The world does not realize what it owes to the Jew. And as religion is the base from which the Jew must ever work, in their Quaballah they have an esoteric teaching that is one with the esoteric philosophies of the countries of the Far East. No nationality—save perhaps the Irish—has been so loyal to their faith and their patriotic belief in the redemption of their race. But the Jews have thriven as a separated people only under the lash of persecution. The same story told under many guises, that opposition gives power to the opposed. Under conditions where racial differentiations are wiped out the Jew shows tendencies toward amalgamation. This may particularly be seen in England where by intermarriage racial lines are obliterated, and religious determinations removed. In this country too it is to be seen that with political and civil laws no longer keeping them apart the Jew has adapted himself to his environment; and the separative laws of his religion which were in the past as effective as civil and political disabilities imposed upon him by the Christian (?) nations, are soon modified and with lapse of time discarded. When persecution ceases assimilation sets in.

So the Jewish race of today is not the race of 2000 years ago. While the fundamental ideals may be the same, the means by which they ought to be obtained divides Jewry. The orthodox Jews of Russia, of Poland—the Jews of the hateful pale, who have suffered beyond the conceiving of the ordinary citizen born and raised in comfort, sigh for the redemption of Israel according to the old order. But "old things change and giveth place to new, and God fulfills himself in many ways," and of this the educated Jew is well aware.

Rehabilitated in Palestine as an independant nationality, even though the hidden strings may be held by England, the two tribes of Judah begin that national life for which they have been educated through the centuries in such a bitter school.

Is Armageddon Being Fought?

And in "the new age" opening we are to have the millennium of peace—according to the prophets prophesying from the housetops. After this cataclysmic war there are to be no further conflicts. The lion is to lie down with the lamb, and the lamb is to remain on the offside at that.

But we see how a tiny blade of grass puts forth a strength and power that upheaves the stone sidewalk; in every leaf in the eucalyptus grove we are told are locked up powers and potentialities that if released would wreck a city block; in the ultra rays being discovered and utilized it is—theoretically—possible to explode the magazine of a war ship from the shore while the vessel is yet scarce perceptible on the horizon; for utilization for purposes of devastation earth and air currents are possibilities. All these are now just emerging from the occult into the practical. If man, the originating "cause" of all the misery that has ever afflicted the world, is to remain the same; if one branch of the human family is to dominate another branch of the same family, it needs no gift of prophetic vision to know that the terrors of war are not yet to end, for "of one blood hath God made all people" and efforts to separate and dominate mean conflict.

And so the matter stands. Nothing has been said regarding the exact status of Manasseh (United States of America) for that is another story. In concluding it may be well to remark that this very comfortable belief of British-Israel is said to be a fulfillment of the dictum inscribed in huge letters over the Royal Exchange in London; at the most noted spot, perhaps, in the world. On one side of the small square in the Royal Exchange, to the left is the Mansion House where the Right Honorable Lord Mayor holds his city court, opposite the "Old Lady of Threadneedle Street"—the Bank of England is situated, and running parallel on the other side of the Exchange is Lombard street—the financial hub of the universe until recently, when the center of financial gravity shifted to Wall street and the dollar became the standard of exchange.

This motto, thus alluded to, is very suggestive. It runs:

"The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof," and the choice pick of the nation sitting in the House of Lords at Westminster may, if they are British-Israelites, gloat over the idea that Ephraim and Manasseh today own about 12,600,000 square miles of territory, the former owning about one-sixth of the earth's surface holding one-fourth of the population; the latter owning about one-fifteenth of the land surface of he globe, containing about twenty-third of the population. It will thus be seen that British Israel has been successful in negotiating a partnership with Deity, and that "Gott und Me," or "Me und Gott" has got nothing on British-Israel.

Uncle Sam, Master Builder.

perts of the greatest building and engineering concerns. We inquired as to the best specialists of many of the great industrial plants and got them to send their men to advise and assist us. They came from all parts of the United States—men who were receiving salaries ranging all the way from $5000 to $20,000 and upwards; they enlisted in Uncle Sam's Army and settled down to work here on the salaries of captains and majors. It meant their giving up the greater part of their incomes, but they accepted the situation on patriotic grounds. These men form that splendid organization now known as the Cantonment Division. It was with them that we made our plans and formed the contract on which the cantonments were built. The contract was very important. It had to suit all sorts of physical conditions and all parts of the United States, but it was such that it fitted every cantonment and proved successful in all."

Here Maj. Starrett showed me one of the contracts. It is a printed pamphlet of only eleven pages, but it has served for the expenditure of more than $134,000,000, and it covers all the conditions of construction of these thirty-two cities. The building has been done without any dispute to speak of, and that at a cost far less than the average amount which the public pays for such work. The ordinary charge for the superintendence and erection of buildings is 8 and 10 per cent. of the cost. By this contract 10 per cent. could be charged only up to $100,000, and after that the fees grew smaller as the amount involved rose. In no case could they exceed $250,000. and this notwithstanding that the estimated cost of some of the cities was more than $9,000,000, and the actual cost ran above that amount.

When the cantonments were built it was found that the average fee, instead of being 8 per cent. or 10 per cent., was just about 2.98 per cent. and this notwithstanding no charges for overhead were included. This means that the work was done for less than one-fourth the usual charge. In many cases the contracting firms undertook the work largely on the grounds of patriotism and to show that they could do quickly the biggest jobs Uncle Sam had on hand.

Letting the Contracts.

I was interested as to how the contracts were let. The building was such that it could not be given out on competitive bids, and Uncle Sam wanted only the best men in the country to have charge of it. To make the selection the Council of National Defense sent out inquiries to the different parts of the United States as to the most honest, experienced and ablest men who were doing big jobs of this kind. When the replies from the different sources came in, the best men were chosen; and these were so classified that the committee had the names of the best builders in each cantonment locality. The men finally selected were proud that they were called upon to do the work, and almost no disputes have arisen regarding the contracts.

The question of labor was fixed by taking union prices and union rules of each locality and going by them. There were no strikes of consequence, and that notwithstanding as many as 160,000 men were working on these cantonment cities at the same time.

The ordering of the materials and their transportation to the widely scattered localities were wonders of modern efficiency and economy. By means of the committees, and especially the lumber and railroad committees connected with the Council of National Defense, which include, as their voluntary dollar-a-year members, the leading men in all branches of trade, the government was able to buy its building supplies at reasonable prices, and transportation arrangements were made with the railroads so that they were delivered on time. At one stage of the work they had over 15,000 carloads of freight moving this way and that over the country. It was difficult to route this freight so it would not cause congestion. Much of it had to go over the mountains which could be crossed only through the passes or bottlenecks, where freight is liable to be congested. The lumber and other materials were so shipped that they went through these bottlenecks in one steady stream, and to do this some of the freight was often sent a long distance around in order to gain time for the whole.

In addition to these cantonment cities Uncle Sam has built sixteen military cities for the National Guard, and a number of great aviation camps for the Signal Corps. The latter have cost over $21,000,000. The cantonment cities have all gone up under the supervision of the Cantonment Division of the War Department, which includes a large corps of inspection officers and other government officials. The force for each city has been organized after the plan of that organization under the direction of Brig.-Gen. Littell. It is the same with the National Guard cities, but not with the aviation camps, which came under the direction of the construction division of the Signal Corps, Lieut.-Col. Edgar commanding.

The new buildings at Washington which I have described were planned under the direction of Maj. Starrett and his committee, and the great storage buildings for supplies and ammunition have come under the province of that committee, and were the result of the great work done by the storage committee of the Council of National Defense.

ARE WE DESCENDED FROM JEREMIAH?

Second Installment. By Theophile Colville.

KING GEORGE of England has foresworn his family name, his German titles, etc. He has shed his German skin as far as that might be possible. But after all that is but the scarf skin, for the "life is in the blood" and the blood of the race is not to be transmuted in any such way.

Then, too, His Majesty is a Jew—blue-blooded descendant of King David, the "favored of God," but so is the German Emperor, and one may not repudiate the other without surrendering title to the heritage of his people. True, so far all of these claims are mere assertion and to find anything more substantial one is referred back to a people that in some respects are almost as much of a puzzle as the Jews themselves —the Irish.

Right here is where the English claim of Jewish descent is said to have been found —found in the old musty records of Ireland when that land was enveloped in myth and legend. But science tells us that mythology is merely the truth wrapped up in point and symbol. In dusty old tombs is set out how about 585 B. C. a venerable and most notable man arrived in Ulster, accompanied by one who is described as the "daughter of a king." The girl was beautiful—they always are in story books—the old man very wise, and with them were certain companions, the party having in their possession several very curious articles. There was an "ark" (in certain manuscripts referred to as a "cauldron"—an equivalent in old time philosophy to a "seed vessel.")

Jeremiah in Ireland.

British-Israelites contend that this old man was none other than the prophet Jeremiah, his fair ward being Tea-Tephi, daughter of King Zedikiah, the last of the kings of Judah. At the fall of Jerusalem Zedikiah was put to death and his people carried into Babylonish captivity. The prophet was saved for he was so lacking in patriotism as to predict in favor of the conquerors, and naturally he found favor in the eyes of the conquerors after having escaped the anger of his own people. In Jeremiah, forty-third chapter, may be read how he and Baruch, his secretary, the king's daughters, and numbers of the women and children, were taken down into Egypt, and that is the last that is learned of the party in the Bible narrative.

In Jerome and Epiphanius it is stated that Jeremiah was stoned to death at Daphnae, but the Irish record says to the contrary. In the Bible, too, we read a list of the treasures taken from the temple of Nebuzaradan, the Babylonish commander-in-chief of the besieging forces, and in this enumeration all the temple vessels appear to be accounted for save the Urim and Thummim and the Ark. Josephus also enumerates the articles taken away—the loot for the spoiler —but he also is dumb regarding the Ark. Why, it is asked, this silence regarding the most precious of the temple treasures?

These questions will be answered, so it is claimed, in large part when the excavations to be undertaken by the British government at Jerusalem, on the site of the old temple are accomplished. Simultaneously it is being hoped that excavations may also be carried on at the "Hill of Tara," alleged to be the site of the first school of the prophets established by Jeremiah. So far the owner of this famed Hill of Tara has refused to allow any digging or fiddling around his property at all.

Pedigree by the Yard.

While in Egypt the princesses, it is claimed, resided in the Palace of Tephanes, which palace, by the way, was uncovered in 1886 by Dr. Petrie, the noted archeologist. From Egypt the prophet traveled to Ireland, but appears to have lost count of his wards, for thenceforward only one "king's daughter is mentioned." In order to maintain the seed-royal Jeremiah consented to a union between Princess Tea-Tephi and Eochaid II, but only after extracting a promise that Baalism be purged out of the country. Tea-Tephi was crowned Queen on the "Lia-Fail"—Jacob's stone—and it then became the property of the Irish Royal house, and passed to all the rulers of Ireland down to Fergus I, who took it over to Scotland. In the meantime Eochaid (or, as some have it, Heremon of Tara) had his people accept the new religion of his wife, a college of prophets was established, and the name of the capital was changed from that of Lothair Croffin to Tara, a word which in Hebrew (Taura) means "The Law of Two Tables." The Murollamain (Hebrew for College of Ollams, or School of the Prophets) must have laid the foundations well, for much later we find 7000 students at the College of Armach alone. From this Queen Tea-Tephi it is averred that a direct and unbroken ancestry can be traced to Fergus I; from him the line continues in Scotland to the time of James I, when the "Stone" was taken to England at the time of the union, and thence the line is unbroken down to the present time.

It is true that the half-crazy bunch of Georges seem to break the continuity, but the first king of that name married the granddaughter of King James I and so the line—though a bit diluted—was maintained intact. The genealogical tree showing this descent looks quite pretty on paper, but looking beneath the surface one is astounded that the side-trackings, muddyings of the stream, and other facts are overlooked. Just as an instance of this take one of the innumerable incidents of English history:

Beer and Royalty not so Remote.

During the troublous times of the first Charles a country girl went to London to seek her fortune, and obtained a position in a brew house to carry beer. Her official position was a "tub woman." She was quite pretty with the coarse, ruddy, healthfulness of the English peasant class, and the brewer took her to his home as maid servant and later married her. He died while she was yet young, and left to her the bulk of his fortune. She was advised to retain the services of a Mr. Hyde, a skillful lawyer of some prominence in those days. She did so, with the result that Mr. Hyde annexed both her and her fortune, and as he later became the Earl of Clarendon she did not do badly from the social standpoint. The couple had as issue only a daughter, who afterwards became the wife of James II, and mother of Mary and Anne, queens of England.

Now, multiply incidents of this kind over and over again and one can appreciate that the blue blood of David, King of Israel, must run pretty thin in the veins of King George V.

Truth to tell, however, one writer on the subject extorts from scripture an additional and strange proof that the English people are Ephraimites, because they are a drunken people and the Jews were forever being chastened by God for "running after strange women." And this writer, while lamenting the fact, wonders at the ways of Providence in giving the larger part of the earth to a race of moral n'er-do-weels.

Nevertheless these strange stories of incidents are used to bolster up the claim that Great Britain and the United States are the modern reincarnation of the two Israelitish tribes of Ephraim-Manasseh—Isaac's sons, otherwise Sac-Suni, from which compound is said to be derived the denominative "Saxons." The word "Sacae" is derived from the old Scythians, and there are those who aver that the Ten Tribes were called "Sacca-Suni" or "Sons of Isaac," in the various countries in and adjacent to Asia Minor. And so bit by bit, and builded up on a comingling of astrocosmological myths with a basis of historic fact, the changes are rung upon the glorious destiny of the Anglo-Saxon race, now populating the larger part of the British Empire, and also being numerically denominative of the United States of America.

Of course it is a matter of common knowledge that the "Anglo-Saxon" (?) English people have annexed every unconsidered trifle lying loose around the globe that was not spiked down hard and fast. That, according to the British-Israelites has merely been the working out their inevitable destiny, just as of old Jehovah sent them up against the Jebussites, the Amalakites, and all the other races they despoiled; slaughtering their women and children and making general havoc for the simple reason—as a rule—that the benighted inhabitants preferred their own God to the particular God in whom the Jews believed—when the latter were not scattering after "strange" Gods of the surrounding peoples.

The attempt to annex the United States and include them in the Anglo-Saxon (?) fold is merely ludicrous. Valid reasons might be advanced against any such wild scheme, but these all fall into abeyance when it is realized that there is no "sich animal" as the Anglo-Saxon race, and there has not been a specimen of the rara avis running around loose for some hundreds of years—that is according to English scholars, and they being enclosed within the pale of the "chosen" people may be supposed to know. It needs no prophet, or the son of a prophet, to proclaim that the unrestrained intermingling of numerous strains of blood results in a mongrel breed, and nothing else. A nation can with advantage to itself absorb a certain proportion of aliens, that is merely obtaining a cross with the advantages that come from judicious cross-breeding; but promiscuous crossing by wholesale can have and has had in the world's experience only the one result—a mongrel race.

The Anglo-Saxon Myth.

Frequently English writers, while enumerating the constituent elements of the alleged Anglo-Saxon race, make mention of the Angles, Saxons, Frisians, Jutes, Danes and so on, but in some unaccountable way omit mention of the Celtic strain. To some extent this has been remedied in recent years, and it is well to bear in mind that the "Chanson de Roland" was sung at the Battle of Hastings. Historians, too, point out that the Normans wiped out the old Saxon kingship, and with it the language, manners and customs of the Saxon race,

TRACTOR EXPEDITION TO FRANCE.

United States Sends 1500 Outfits. By Henry Morgenthau, Jr.

Note—The idea of reinforcing the waning agricultural strength of France with American tractors originated with Henry Morgenthau, Jr., who writes this article. Mr. Morgenthau is the son of Henry Morgenthau, former American Ambassador to Turkey. The Food Administration has designated Henry Morgenthau, Jr., to follow the machines to France and put them in operation.—[Ed.

AMERICAN tractors—1500 of them—sent by the United States Food Administration, will battle hunger in France. When spring comes they will be in the field.

French crop production in 1917 was more than one-third less than in the year before the war. All able-bodied Frenchmen up to 50 years of age are fighting, and though the women, children and old men have made heroic efforts to maintain the agriculture of the country on a normal basis, the burden has exceeded their strength and endurance.

One acre out of every four in France now lies idle from sheer lack of man and animal power to plow, seed and harvest crops upon it. So this expedition of 1500 farm tractors and plows with experts to put them in operation, not only will increase the French harvest in 1918, but the presence of these powerful farm machines preparing their land for crops will cheer French hearts.

French High-Commissioner M. Tardieu approved the idea on behalf of the French government and we are assured that the ordering of these tractors at this time will not in the least impair the supply for our own farmers. Manufacturers have ample time to produce additional tractors for the American demand.

Tractors Carried on Navy Transport.

The first 100 tractors were sent to France on the deck of a naval transport and the entire number will reach there in plenty of time for spring plowing.

Purchase, shipment and transportation of 1500 farm tractor outfits to France would in time of peace be a comparatively simple matter, but today it is made difficult by war restrictions and many unusual conditions. All these obstacles have been overcome in the case of these tractors.

The tractors will operate mainly in the battle-scarred portion of Northern France which has been retaken from the Germans. There property lines have been largely obliterated. The fields are consequently large and the batteries of tractors will be able to work most effectively. Thus in a few months food crops, especially wheat and potatoes, will be growing in French soil plowed by American tractors—soil that a few months ago was the "No Man's Land" between the great battle lines.

French Government Subsidizes Purchases.

The size and significance of this tractor enterprise is, however, more striking than the mere presence of American tractors in France, as the French have for several years been operating American-made tractors. With characteristic thoroughness, they have kept careful records of the work accomplished, fuel consumed, repairs and other details of the work.

An American tractor in France.

Satisfied with the general results, the French government by legal enactment January 2, 1917, created a credit of $6,000,000 for subsidizing agricultural co-operative societies and groups of farmers for the purchase of tractors. In some instances the government has advanced 40 per cent. of the price of the tractors to aid and encourage farmers in securing them.

The tractors and plows in this expedition are being purchased by the French High Commission with money loaned to them by the Treasury Department, and the expense of the mechanics who accompany them is being met by adding a lump sum to the purchase price of the tractors. Judging from past experience these outfits will plow about 500,000 acres for wheat, potatoes and sugar beets this spring, and 1,000,000 acres for fall planting of wheat.

Using Tractors in Groups.

When operated in large fields, as in the reconquered zone, the tractors work in batteries of ten, preferably all of the same make. With each battery there are ten drivers, two blacksmiths, two mechanics, one cook and a manager in charge who has a clerk to assist him. In addition, there is a field man who lays out the work for the tractors; and several motor trucks which serve as workshops, or for hauling provisions, repairs, fuel and supplies.

Machines of medium size and relatively simple construction have been selected. They are of the 9-18 and 10-20 horse power sizes. The plows used are self-lift gang plows having three twelve-inch bottoms.

Wounded Soldiers Plowing Land.

These batteries of tractors are subject to the orders of the Minister of Agriculture, notwithstanding the fact that 75 per cent. of the operators are soldiers. The problem of getting competent operators and mechanics has been one of the most difficult to solve. Mechanics at present employed on the batteries of tractors either are men relieved from military obligation, wounded men who have not regained their strength, or inexperienced young men below draft age. The Agricultural Service also has sought to employ as mechanics cripples from the reeducation schools, who have studied mechanical courses for a few weeks.

American Experts Will Instruct French.

The United States Food Administration's tractor expedition will include a limited number of experienced mechanics, who will help supervise and instruct the French in the operation of the machines. It is planned to conduct American lines and to organize the 150 new batteries in the shortest time possible and also to assist the French Minister of Agriculture in distributing the tractors and operating them economically.

Saving 400 Shiploads of Food.

In addition to the beneficial effect the machines will have on the morale of the French people, the land plowed by the tractors in 1918 is expected to produce 1,500,000 tons of sugar beets and potatoes and 450,000 tons of wheat; and this increased production in France, amounting to nearly 2,000,000 tons of food, will obviate the sending of about 400 large shiploads from America through the perilous submarine zone.

Horse that Committed Suicide.

threw his rope." Hal's words tumbled one after the other while his father sat his horse apparently stolid, but he was inwardly aquiver as was the younger man. When Hal spoke of "one of the boys" Hammond could have named that one. He knew the position of each and the action of each for they were obeying his orders.

As they watched, Mercury's ways became narrower and narrower in their wild dashing impelled thus by the hidden vaqueros in the brush and occasional timber. He was mad with the smell of them. There is nothing that will so strike terror to a wild horse as the dreaded man smell. Now for the first time in his life Mercury was in the midst of it. Its horribleness assailed his nostrils at every turn though he could not see the men.

There were two dozen mounted men to catch a wild horse in a wild country. Mercury had known such country from his colthood. There over steep trails made by him and the herds, he had developed such a surefootedness that he could plunge over boulder-strewn, grass-slippery slopes at a terrific speed. He seemed to fly rather than to run. No one of the vaqueros could overtake him but always a fresh one was ready to give him the chase. Hammond had never seen a horse that could so nearly climb a perpendicular wall. He saw him go up such a one. The vaquero rode around and threw his rope, but Mercury was down again. On the floor of the small valley everything melted past him as the wind. Hal could see him clearly now. He realised his father's great desire for the magnificent creature, the fastest horse ever seen in California.

He dashed into a clump of cedar. He was out again when a vaquero at right angles to his path shot out his seventy foot riata. He was attempting a miracle. He performed it. Mercury felt restraining rawhide for the first time. It took all the riata to do it. Only two feet were left to snub around the saddle horn.

"Now we'll know if he is an outlaw!" Hal exclaimed.

"Who-e-e! Who-ee!" The vaqueros riding up could not restrain their shouts of triumph.

They shouted too soon. Mercury was in a frenzy. He was rearing, plunging and surging. It was fight to the death for him. But it was a skilful vaquero at the other end of the rope. He was about to throw Mercury when the horse reared in such a manner and with such force he gained several yards of the rope. It coiled up from the saddle horn like a menacing snake. It was a menace. Mercury with a knowledge, gained they knew not where, pulled the rope taut. As suddenly he relaxed it till the vaquero's mount sank to his haunches in a reeling fall. Mercury's fierce teeth gleamed. With one snap of his jaws he cut the tough rawhide clean in two. A blare shook his nostrils. He was free!

Free! Every movement of minutest muscle proclaimed it.

"He's off!" A smothered oath escaped Hammond, but Mercury was making straight for the canvas corral where already were captured a group of wild mustangs. This was not according to plan. Hammond had hoped to get Mercury in a corral by himself.

"Now if those guys lose their heads!" Hal heard his father mutter as he galloped beside him. But the vaqueros did not lose their heads. Like automatons wound for action they opened the short side of the corral, they closed it. There at last was Mercury! He was among other wild horses to be sure but strange to him, his enemies: for they were not of his band. Now at the end of such a chase surely he could be subdued. Hammond even feared for his life. There was no need of such fear. Mercury was master to the last. He began such a fight with teeth and heels as was never seen among horses.

"He's an outlaw for sure!" Hammond exclaimed, "But not the crazy kind. Just watch him, Hal, and look out for yourself, every minute. I never saw such a stampede with so few horses. Mercury tramples them as though they were puppies in a stable."

Such clouds of dust as arose, such shouting of men and blaring of horses! Hammond shouted that no man was to throw a rope. It was useless. All effort must be made to keep the surging mass in the corral. Suddenly it was seen that Mercury had downed three of the horses one on another. He leaped to the very peak of the horse pyramid. They writhed beneath him but here as always Mercury was sure footed. With an easy vault he was over the fence, his hoofs just missing Hal's face by an inch.

No orders had been given the men for this event. Hammond himself gave chase. He could not give up. Hal followed. For two miles into higher, rougher country they rode. With unerring instinct Mercury had found his band. The two men came upon them near the brink of a canyon, the sides of which were perpendicular walls of porphyry. Hammond and Hal ran right upon the terrified herd when Mercury, neck arched, eyes wild and tail flowing, stood blowing. At last he was half spent with the terrific fight and chase. At once Hammond flung his riata. For the life of him Hal could not keep his own back though he thought it was useless. Both were lucky throws, Hammond's by skill, Hal's, by pure chance, had circled the feet of a young mare just out of colthood. Hammond's hand had never lost an ounce of its iron. He had Mercury! When the rope fell over his head, Mercury and his band were faced toward the chasm. The band swerved and ran along the edge of the canyon but Mercury did not swerve. Hammond was pulled by the flying, leaping creature straight toward destruction. Now he knew his effort was of no avail. He loosed his hold on the riata. He jerked it free of the saddle horn; not a moment too soon. Mercury was making his last dash for liberty. A tragedy was about to be enacted. Mercury knew what he was doing. He was committing suicide.

Hammond saw that the last yards to the brink of the chasm were actually covered with a burst of speed. Mercury did not stumble over the ledge. He leaped! For an instant Hal saw the beautiful animal silhouetted against the blood-red sky of a California sunset, blood-red like the snow flowers Mercury had trampled in his flight. Under him for that instant was the flood of sky, above him and around—for a splendidly picturesque moment thus, then disappearance.

Later they found him 300 feet below the ledge. The splashed spots upon his body they discovered were the marks of many battles with other stallions when he throughout his life had fought his way to supremacy and leadership of his band. Where savage teeth had torn away skin and hair nature had supplied new tissue that was black instead of white.

Hal by his lucky throw had saved the day and it is difficult to tell which was the prouder, father or son, when they discovered that Hal's capture was a white mare undoubtedly sired by Mercury without a mark upon her from forelock to heel with the promise of all the good points of the sire.

"Mercury, the Second! Not an outlaw!" exclaimed Hal.

"And yours for the capture," said his father with a smile that twisted a little as he thought of the magnificent Mercury broken upon the rocks.

THE MODERN BLACKSMITH.

The village blacksmith planted peas
  And carrots, too.
'Twas a small garden, if you please,
  He had in view.

But neighbors let their poultry stray
  From divers pens.
The blacksmith now puts in the day
  A-shooing hens.

TWO NOTORIOUS GERMAN SEA RAIDERS.

Second Installment. By Lieutenant (J. G.) S. F. Bryant, U. S. Navy.

ENVER PASHA, War Minister, was a German protege. In days gone by he had recovered Adrianople for Turkey from the Bulgarians. The Germans picked him out after the Turkish Revolution as just the promising, high-handed chauvinist assistant that they most needed in the oriental department of their infernal machine. He was made Turkish military attache at Berlin. There the spell of the war game, a spell that rivalled that thrown over a Monte Carlo victim, was woven. Enver then returned. Upon the murder of Shevket Pasha, the Minister of War, the young German protege, still in his thirties, took his place at the head of the Turkish military machine. There are some in Constantinople who believe that Enver had more of a hand in the murder than they dare say out loud. Somewhat short, black-eyed, well-built, determined and alert in mien, yet suave and almost effusive at times in manner. Enver was keenly ambitious, and aspired to be a military leader of history.

A story told of the War Minister may serve to illustrate one side of his character.

The Greek patriarch, the head of the Greek church, went to Enver to implore him to ameliorate the sufferings of the Armenians. The curt reply was: "You tend to your prayers, and I'll tend to the Armenians."

Enver was the connecting link between the German and Turkish forces, and one of the principal members of the scheming squad that threw Turkey into the war against her will and against her old friends.

The combination was made up of Baron Wangenhein, Gen. Liman von Saunders, Admiral Suchon and Enver. Baron Wangenhein, the German Ambassador to Turkey, was a man most noted for his ability to drive others into carrying out his designs. Von Saunders was the leading German army officer in Turkey, who later was put in command at the Dardanelles. Admiral Suchon was introduced by the entrance of the Goeben. Here appears the first important link in the chain of events which ruined Turkey and in which the German cruisers played so large a part. The scheme was one that brought forth historical results. The several ramifications were as follows:

The Hellish German Plots.

(1.) A campaign of propaganda was inaugurated, maps appeared in the Turkish markets showing how much territory the Turks had lost or had been robbed of since the Balkan League had been formed. Enver Pasha was widely advertised as the hero that had recovered Adrianople from the Bulgarians. The Turks were reminded of the traditional wrongs that Russia had inflicted upon them. It was carefully brought out that England had united with Russia against Turkey. Also, that in the natural course of events Germany was the only power left which was strong enough to aid Turkey. The Kaiser was actually portrayed as the Defender of Islamism, and in some quarters of the interior the natives were informed that he had turned to the Mohammedan faith. He was pointed out as the only man who could save Turkey from Russia. A very important bit of information spread broadcast was that the Moslems of India were about to rebel against their English tyrants, who were slowly destroying the power of Islam. Also that the Egyptians were preparing to throw off the British yoke.

(2.) The army was expanded into a system under German military control. Newspapers that were not discreetly pro-German were suppressed by the military. Papers subsidized by Teuton money published ridiculous accounts of German achievements. Posts and telegraphs were censored by army officials. Throughout the army hatred was stirred up against the British. In a camp of newly collected troops an official was known to have marched up and down declaring, "England is the enemy, England is the enemy!" Later on a wounded Turkish soldier from Gallipoli exclaimed in a hospital, "The English are coming to destroy our homes, the English are helping Russia, the English are the worst enemy, and the English use dum dum bullets!" The news was also spread in the army that some day the Turks must regain Egypt; that the British were taking Egypt away from them.

(3.) Promises were lavishly made. The hated "Capitulation," which so degradingly restricted the sovereignty of the nations, would be abolished under German guarantee. Crete would be restored. Money and plenty of it would be forthcoming from Germany. It was said that there was for this purpose more gold aboard the Goeben than in the Imperial Ottoman Bank! (What mattered if Turkey should hopelessly mortgage herself?) Germany would also pledge herself to provide expert advisers for the Turkish governmental departments. As an example, a corps of German professors was sent to "assist" the progress of education (German unmentioned) in the Stamboul University.

(4.) The Dardanelles were closed and heavily mined. From various reports it was believed that the defenses of the straits were strengthened by littoral torpedo tubes. Two cargoes of munitions then in the Mediterranean were, for safety, dispatched to Syria.

(5.) The Turkish army was slowly enforced by detachments of German troops, artillery and munitions. A friend discovered by accident, long before war was declared, a considerable and entirely unsuspected force of German soldiers at a Turkish fort not far from Constantinople.

(6.) Admiral Suchon, by "advisory" work, actually got in practical command of the Turkish navy. For some reason the Turkish Minister of Marine was put in command of the Syrian forces of troops. The German naval officers were distributed among the Turkish warships. As the Turkish naval officer is lacking in natural ability and advanced training for the sea, the knowledge of the Germans on each ship became an irresistible tool, and it was not long before the Ottoman navy was quietly controlled from the German Admiralty headquarters established in the Golden Horn on our old friend the S.S. General. One factor that "Fritz" might not have seen the humor in was that all commands on the Turkish ships had to be given in the only language mutually understood, English. Most of the Turkish naval officers had gathered a little English from the Naval Commission of British Officers previously sent to Turkey to aid in building up the Ottoman navy. As for the Germans, the majority of their naval officers speak English.

The Big Move.

(7.) The crowning piece of strategy lay in the advantageous use that the Germans made of the seizure of two Turkish ships then being built in England. These were the Reshadie and Sultan Osman, two battleships that would have turned the strength of the Ottoman navy against that of the Greeks. These ships had been subscribed for from the savings of the Turkish people. Soon after war began the British refused delivery. Law in this case made no difference. The palpable proof that England was prejudiced against the Turks and would unite with Russia against them was very evident. The Germans made such good use of this point that many Turks really became deeply resentful towards Britain.

To cap the climax, the Teutons found a solution that seemed most thoughtful and beneficial to the Turks. If the British could dishonorably rob the Turkish people of their much-hoped-for warships, the Germans would generously atone for these wrongs by selling them the Goeben and Breslau, two ships that were ready to fight any minute. The German-inspired papers spoke of the British move as an act of piracy by a bully against a small state. Here appears the second link (and a most valuable one) that the Goeben formed in the chain that fettered Turkey in these last few years of general destruction of human life. The deal was put through and modestly advertised almost everywhere. It was pointed out how easily the fighting strength of the fleet was doubled, and how with great ceremony the "Crescent" had been raised at the flagstaffs and Turkish crews put on board the German ships. As a matter of fact, there were but a handful of Turks allowed on board at all. There were a few officers and some thirty men who never got below the berth deck, and whose mere existence on board abruptly terminated after a few weeks' stay. The German crews, much to their disgust, were ordered to exchange their ribboned caps for fezzes. These hot and brimless head coverings allowed many a merry sunbeam to burn unmercifully the Teutonic proboscides. Moreover, it is not to be presumed that the Germans exchanged their man-o'-war ensigns for the red crescents without a few pangs of smitten pride.

(8.) But in spite of the intrigues of these four men, Turkey would not put her head in the noose. It, therefore, remained to devise a master stroke. It was strange that the plan then decided upon was carried out in detail just as had been predicted by a German friend a few weeks before. Turkish torpedo boats under control of German officers on August 29 deliberately opened fire on the Russian port of Odessa. A gunboat was sunk, much damage done, and Russia insulted beyond apology. It was an affair difficult to comprehend from the Russian point of view. It meant war. It was generally believed that the only Minister in the Cabinet that knew anything of this plan beforehand was Enver Pasha. Here again the German cruisers played their part in furnishing officers to direct the raid.

Under the Red Crescent.

After the Turks were snagged into the war there were rumors of possible revolution. Again the Goeben had its part to play. At one time she anchored in the Bosphorus just off Dolma Bagtche, the Sultan's palace, with her guns trained abeam. It presented the most formidable sight in Turkey. With the Breslau she would have been a match for the entire Turkish navy because of superior speed, trained men, and modern fighting efficiency. She carried ten eleven-inch and twelve six-inch and twelve twenty-four-pounder guns. One of the eleven-inch turrets has a loading record below eight seconds. An advantage in action is that in each turret some sixteen shells with their powder charges in brass cases can be carried. There are four submerged torpedo tubes. The horse power is about 85,000 at twenty-eight knots. Each turret is fitted with its own range finder, range transmitters and substation below the turret. The complement is about 1100 men. All furniture aboard is of steel. Stacks are encased with six-inch mantlets that extend about twelve feet above the upper deck. There are four screws, two rudders and two steering engines.

Whenever thinking of the sea power of Turkey, one's mind unconsciously turns to the Goeben. Throughout all her escapades the Turks came to regard her as the backbone of the Ottoman sea strength. Time and time again she survived long voyages in the Black Sea in the face of a Russian fleet several times her strength. Each return was but another sign to the Turks of the presence of a force that was worsting the Russian. Undoubtedly then her political influence all during the war had considerable effect upon the morale of the population, a factor that was important to foster with care.

To care for such a craft it was necessary to fit out some sort of a base for repairs and supplies. A small cove in the Bosphorus at Stenia, halfway between the Black Sea and Constantinople, was selected. Here works of a French engineering company were seized and made good use of. The inhabitants of the adjoining village, with the exception of a few Turks, were expelled from the neighborhood. There was just room in the tiny harbor for the Goeben, the Breslau, the Turkish destroyers that were engaged on patrol work, and two transports serving as more comfortable quarters and receiving ships.

The Goeben Nearly Finished.

The first work of the Germans lay in the Black Sea. With their superior speed it was most difficult for the Russians to catch them even with larger forces. Coal was vitally needed by Turkey. As her only serviceable mines were on the Black Sea coast and were not connected by railroads with the capital, it became necessary to send ships into the Black Sea. The Goeben in many cases convoyed these ships. One of the trips nearly resulted in disaster. The account is as follows:

In the fall of 1914 the battle cruiser was steaming out of the Bosphorus into the Black Sea, heading towards Odessa. All water-tight doors were closed. The officers and men were at their noon-day meal. A sudden terrible explosion on the starboard side forward brought all hands to quarters. But one minute after the explosion there came another on the port side. The ship had picked up a cable connecting two mines. She settled heavily in the water, so low that for a while her officers thought her done for. The ship, however, was able to steam slowly back to Stenia. Engineers and supplies were sent for from Germany for the repairs. The task of patching two rents in the hull that a diver could not reach across was an enormous one. The forward explosion had deformed all the plating from the armor belt down to the docking keels. The injured compartments were provision storerooms. The after rent was outside a coal bunker under number three turret. This turret was said to have been out of commission for some time. One factor that prevented the damage from being more serious was a thick protective deck that acted as a support for vertical bulkheads. Repairs were carried out in some three months' time by means of coffer-dams built around the holes.

The bottoms of the coffer-dams were constructed in the form of tanks. Pump connections to these governed the depth of the coffer-dams. The upper edges of the sides were fitted with tanks that served to keep the coffer-dams vertical. The inside gripping edges of the dams were lined with oakum and canvas. As the water was pumped out the pressure tightened the oakum against the hull. A number of chains secured the coffer-dams in position while the work was in progress. Ship's pumps were used for evacuation.

As far as possible, injured plates were entirely removed by acetylene torches and then replaced.

One handicap in this work was the lack in Turkey of skilled labor and particular appliances.

One interesting item of the work was a diagram that the German engineers had of a similar coffer-dam that was employed by the Russians in effecting repairs after a mine explosion under one of their battleships at Port Arthur. We trust that the Germans had an accurate copy!

There were many current reports that steel plates resembling fish scales in their formation were ineffectually tried out for such hull repairs. Also fillings of cement. The latter, one heard, were subject to cracking from the effects of gunfire.

The Social Scheme.

At Stenia the Germans made themselves at home. On the hillsides behind the port, a farm was laid out—the "Goeben Scientific Farm." When in port the sailors were put to work upon it. To increase its popularity, the work, during certain days of the week, was converted into a social function, attended by various members of the Germano-Levantine fair sex from the capital.

There were a few other items of interest at Stenia. For precaution against venturesome enemy submarines, booms and nets were rigged at the harbor entrance, and at one time the Goeben was surrounded by a string of old schooners.

One of the many doubtful rumors told of a raid made on the Goeben by a crowd of angry Turkish women, who objected to their sons getting killed for Germany. It was said that they raised such a row at Stenia that the Goeben had to get underway for the sake of peace and lie for a few days in the Marmora. All that was really known was that the cruiser did leave Stenia for the few days.

To illustrate the modest and bashful attitude of the German in Turkey today, the following occurrence may be of use. When war was first declared by Turkey, it so happened that the royal yacht of the Khedive of Egypt lay anchored in a part of the Bosphorus not far from Stenia, where the current was rather strong. When a storm arose and the captain tried to get the 3000-ton yacht under way, he found his condensers clogged. As his anchors were dragging, he sent an officer to the nearest Turkish headquarters for a tug and an assignment to a safe anchorage in the city harbor. While the anchors were dragging one Turkish excuse after another

THE HORSE THAT COMMITTED SUICIDE.

Mercury, the White Outlaw. By Wilbur Sturtevant.

IT IS a sunshine orgy all the way across the mesas and tablelands of the Painted Desert region, across sandy wastes and catcus-pricked plains into Southern California. Here too the sunshine is often cruel. Through eons of time it has made of the earth a desolation. This sandy expanse is the flaw of the crystal, or a foil set down by nature to bring into relief the coast region's lavish loveliness.

Traveling westward through this country from his Arizona cattle ranch to his California orchard, Robert Hammond with his party of vaqueros, picked from the most skillful of all western horse wranglers, realized subconsciously the story of the land told by the very names of the towns through which they passed, names which incongruously mingled unknown and foreign with American and Indian—Blake, Piute, Siam, Bengal, Bagdad, Hiawatha, Pisgah, Barstow. So was the land to him, comfortingly familiar, yet alluringly foreign, full of possibilities of adventure.

With the lordly, ermine-mantled mountains of the San Bernardino range in view there was a prelude pianissimo of gentler beauties. No more were cactus, sage brush and boulders the predominating features of the landscape. From the car window in this early spring season Hammond could see the high yuccas lift their cream cups and, inverted, they seemed to spill upon the sand of the washes the bright wine of the cardinal flower. An occasional brodiaea on its wire stem lifted its purple head from the base of a rock, while here and there the mimulus grew golden.

When in the orange orchard country again the names of towns tell a story, this time a poem with their lyrical liquid sounds —Loma Linda, El Monte, Puente, San Gabriel. Hammond was stirred by the view, familiar though it was. Here the valleys were vocal with a band of singing rivers hastening to the ultimate sea. Even where man's hand had not wrought, flowers were everywhere—gardens of lupine, wild asters, blue and white; alder, lilac and Indian paint brush. The mustard gilded the landscape till the yellow yielded to the green of alfalfa meadow and orchard, the green became the amber of foothills which in turn merged into the snow-brushed purple of mountains. All hues were limited only by the sky's scintillating blue.

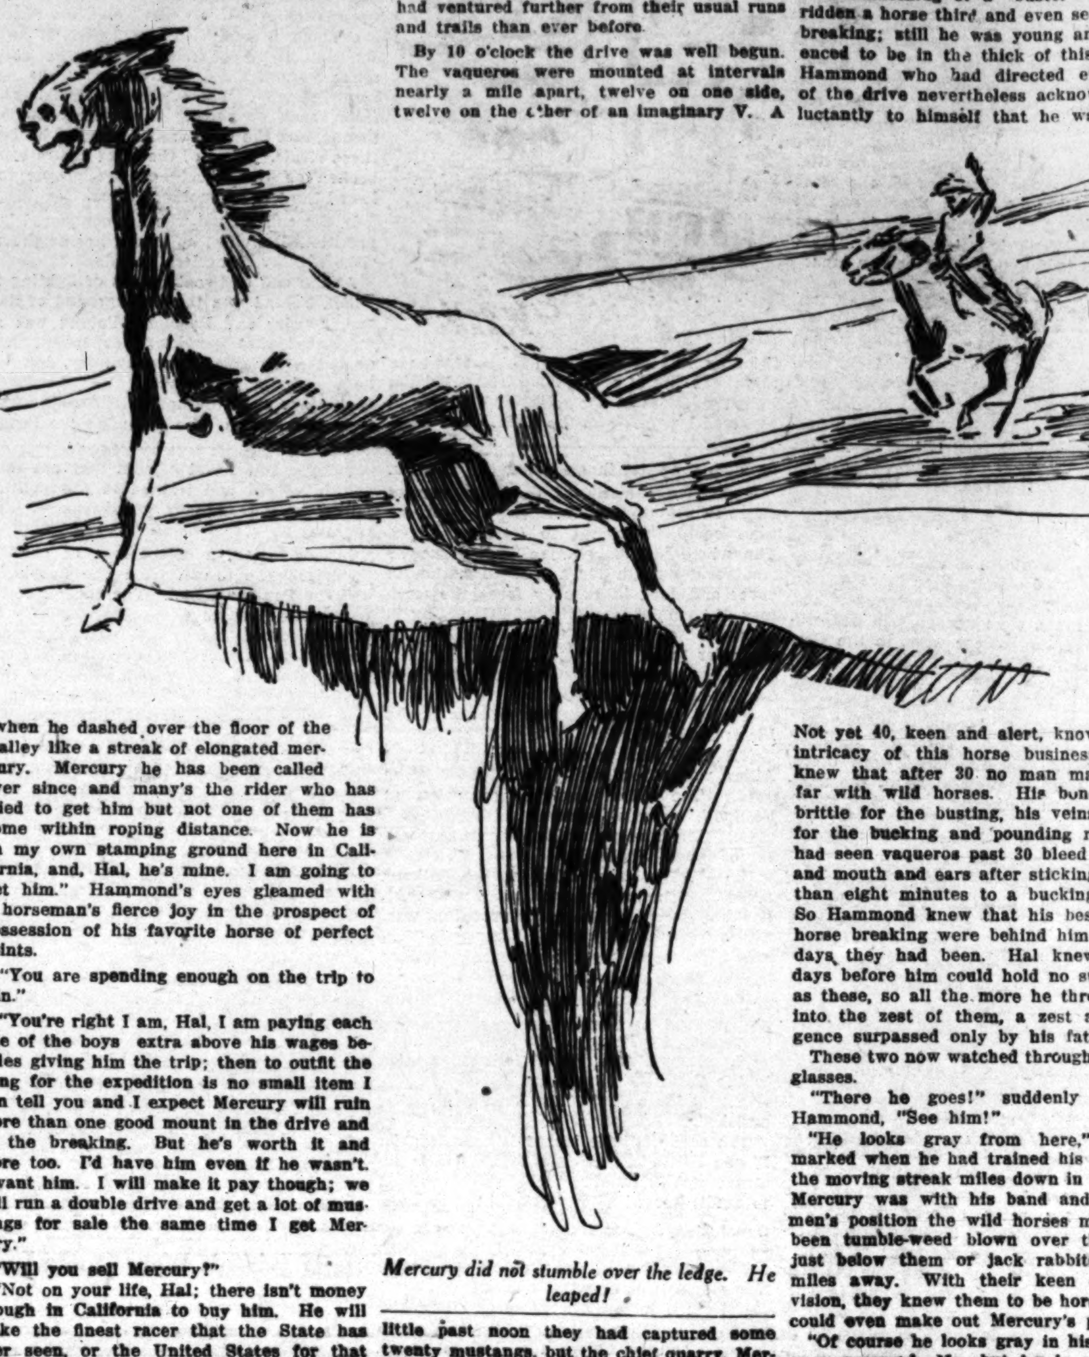
This was the beauty Hammond saw, and loved the more because he was returning to it. It was his plan to go to Los Angeles to buy the supplies for the expedition and at his ranch home meet his son, Hal, who had "cut" the second semester at the university for the one purpose of going with his father on the last wild horse hunt that California has known.

It is thought by many that with the cessation of swinging bells in the mission campaniles, the passing of sandal-shoon, brown frocked friars, who themselves often left off their ecclesiastical duties to raise and train famous California horses, with the coming of the ubiquitous automobile, had passed forever the adventure story of the California horseman and horse. It is believed that this is left to the cinema often out of focus with the truth. Gone is the wild Apache from Arizona, the buffalo from the plains, the bear from the Sierra Madres; but even today thousands of wild mustangs range over the rugged mountains of Nevada near the California line and no inconsiderable number undeterred by a mere imaginary State line pass into California.

It was in a range of mountains south of Death Valley and north of the Santa Fe that Hammond with his son planned to hunt for a band of wild mustangs headed by a stallion already famous throughout the wild horse region, though he had never been touched by the rope of vaquero. Between Castle Peak and Fountain Peak was to be enacted a drama of incredible appeal and strength. Here engirt with some of California's aridity and further and more closely enveloped by her finer grace and homage-impelling grandeur, Hammond and his men had come with all the paraphernalia for a great horse drive.

"How many do you expect to get this trip, dad?" Hal asked his father as they rode side by side over a wider trail than usual with the bunch of vaqueros jogging along leisurely on their mounts behind them; some thirty in number stretched over a quarter of mile or more.

"It isn't quantity I'm after this time, Hal, it's quality. I'm laying all my plans to get Mercury. When you first see him, you'll know in a minute he's worth all the work even if I don't catch another horse this year. He is a beauty for sure. He ranged in Arizona two years ago and I named him when he dashed over the floor of the valley like a streak of elongated mercury. Mercury he has been called ever since and many's the rider who has tried to get him but not one of them has come within roping distance. Now he is on my own stamping ground here in California, and, Hal, he's mine. I am going to get him." Hammond's eyes gleamed with a horseman's fierce joy in the prospect of possession of his favorite horse of perfect points.



Mercury did not stumble over the ledge. He leaped!

"You are spending enough on the trip to win."

"You're right I am, Hal, I am paying each one of the boys extra above his wages besides giving him the trip; then to outfit the gang for the expedition is no small item I can tell you and I expect Mercury will ruin more than one good mount in the drive and in the breaking. But he's worth it and more too. I'd have him even if he wasn't. I want him. I will make it pay though; we will run a double drive and get a lot of mustangs for sale the same time I get Mercury."

"Will you sell Mercury?"

"Not on your life, Hal; there isn't money enough in California to buy him. He will make the finest racer that the State has ever seen, or the United States for that matter, if we can just break him right."

"If you can catch him, you can break him, can't you?"

"It isn't so easy but we can if he's not an outlaw. There are just three classes, I've found, of wild horses—those you can never break because they are too smart for you—outlaws—those you can break and those it's no use to break because they are loco. There are crazy horses the same as crazy men. They have crazy written all over them. Mercury doesn't belong to that class. I've been near enough to know that."

"Do you think Mercury is an outlaw?"

"Tomorrow we'll know." The answer was something of an admission, but there was a look in Hammond's face that indicated that this greatly desired horse was nothing but perfect.

The morrow found everything ready for the drive Already the men had been out from the San Gabriel Valley ten days. Hammond was major-general of the expedition and the men recognized his authority. The day in this higher altitude was clear and cold, a frosty spring morning. Indeed they had seen three spring seasons—the one of the coast valley radiant, amazing; the one of the desert's edge mystical, awing; now the one of the mountains. They passed patches of snow through which the blood-red snow flowers grew virile, flaunting, sometimes a foot high, their flags of vivid color out of the blankets of cold purity. Hammond had chosen this time of the year; for the unusual snows of the preceding winter had made it impossible for the mustangs to paw through to grass. Now they had ventured further from their usual runs and trails than ever before.

By 10 o'clock the drive was well begun. The vaqueros were mounted at intervals nearly a mile apart, twelve on one side, twelve on the other of an imaginary V. A little past noon they had captured some twenty mustangs, but the chief quarry, Mercury, was still without the net. No one thought of eating. The sport was approaching its climax. Miles away the most skillful riders were trying to cut Mercury from his band and edge him on to the broad beginning of the V. At the point of the V six of the men were managing to keep those already captured in the canvas corral where they circled wildly about. Another triangular corral was ready. It was empty.

Strange fact this, that experience has showed in wild horse breaking that canvas is as a granite wall to the captive. A stake fence may impale valuable horse flesh, wire may tear to pieces; but canvas is beyond the realm of a wild horse's experience. It looks formidable to him. Never having touched it he fears it as all unknown things are feared, even by man. Hammond's men had carried up by pack animals more than enough canvas fence-sections for the end of the drive. Now they were coming into good play.

The wild horses of these western mountains and plains are for the catching the undisputed property of any horse wrangler who can throw his riata right or force them into a trap. This is not so easy. It is a sport that requires not only skill but unparalleled coolness and courage. Few are willing to venture so hazardous an undertaking even for such big rewards. Hammond was one of these few.

He and Hal were together at the end of the drive. It was here the wind-up for Mercury would most likely be. Although Hal was a rider from his early boyhood, was even something of a "buster" too, having ridden a horse third and even second in the breaking; still he was young and inexperienced to be in the thick of this fray; and Hammond who had directed every detail of the drive nevertheless acknowledged reluctantly to himself that he was too old. Not yet 40, keen and alert, knowing every intricacy of this horse business, still he knew that after 30 no man may venture far with wild horses. His bones are too brittle for the busting, his veins too fixed for the bucking and pounding riding. He had seen vaqueros past 30 bleed from nose and mouth and ears after sticking not more than eight minutes to a bucking mustang. So Hammond knew that his best days for horse breaking were behind him and great days they had been. Hal knew that the days before him could hold no such scenes as these, so all the more he threw himself into the zest of them, a zest and intelligence surpassed only by his father's.

These two now watched through their field glasses.

"There he goes!" suddenly exclaimed Hammond, "See him!"

"He looks gray from here," Hal remarked when he had trained his glasses on the moving streak miles down in the valley. Mercury was with his band and from the men's position the wild horses might have been tumble-weed blown over the ground just below them or jack rabbits twenty miles away. With their keen out-of-door vision, they knew them to be horses. They could even make out Mercury's points.

"Of course he looks gray in his dust, but once groomed—My, but he is a beauty!" Hammond broke off, "See those markings on him, jet black splashes from mane to tail. They only make him the more striking. Watch his action! Did you ever see such speed?" Mercury who had been running at the rear of his band was now overhauling them and passed them as though they were standing still. Then something happened. Hal's mount moved restlessly, feeling a light touch of spur unintended by his master. Hal lowered his glasses. He had seen Mercury cut from his band.

"Where do you want me, dad, when they drive him up?"

"Keep on your horse every minute, Hal. See that you are well on the outside of the canvas from the start. Keep near me. Mind what I say?" Suddenly his tones had become sharp, they rang out imperiously. His growing excitement made them so, and Hal could scarcely keep his mount for the thrill of the moment.

"Look at him! He smells the boys. We are getting him sure. See him start up that north canyon, now he's trying a south trail. The boys scare him back. Did you see him wheel then? I bet one of the boys

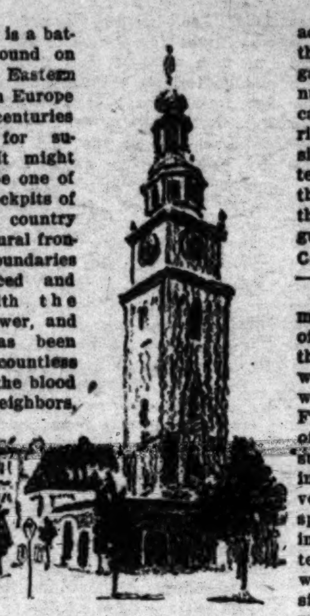
THE BATTLE GROUND OF POLAND.

Struggling for Supremacy. By Frank J. Klingberg, Ph. D.



POLAND is a battle ground on which Eastern and Western Europe have for centuries struggled for supremacy. It might be said to be one of the three cockpits of Europe. A country without natural frontiers, its boundaries have advanced and receded with the sway of power, and its soil has been soaked countless times with the blood of all its neighbors.

In the present war, fighting goes on over the age-old battlefields, many recent battles taking place at strategic points famous in history. The late battle at Tannenburg has been celebrated in Germany as a revenge for the defeat of the Teutonic Knights of the Poles in 1410 on the same spot. Lemberg, Cracow, Warsaw, Vilna, Riga and Vienna are again associated with the rage of battle.

Charles XII, Alexander I, Frederick the Great, and Napoleon ravaged the land which is the twentieth century stage for a terrible modern war. A gruesome echo of the past is a typical one from the fourteenth century of the invasion of the Tartars, who carried off 100,000 prisoners; earlier records tell of dreadful sufferings from the Mongols, who carried off people and plunder, including on one occasion nine sacks of human ears, a faint suggestion of the habits of these hordes.

In addition to the competition of surrounding powers, the endless civil wars and internal tumults of Poland have been amazing. The gallant and chivalrous Poles have also been a most turbulent people, in pursuit of "wandering fires" politically, and so ready for riot that we find even funerals were a common occasion for conflict as when a famous Prince Radziwill's body was carried to church, horsemen rode into the sacred edifice at full speed and struck their lances against the bier. Bishops and priests were thrown down and a great tumult arose. The history of Poland before the partitions is full of picturesque characters and romantic adventures, as well of much that is sordid.

An understanding of social and religious conditions is necessary to illuminate the otherwise meaningless centuries of warfare. The country was a land of peasants and nobles only, with no middle class to function between them. The peasants at one time, freemen, were reduced to serfdom and became the absolute property of the lords who had power of life and death over them. To quote from a famous historian: "The nobles regard the cultivator and the plebeian as dogs. That is the expression used by these abominable men who if they kill a peasant say they have killed a dog."

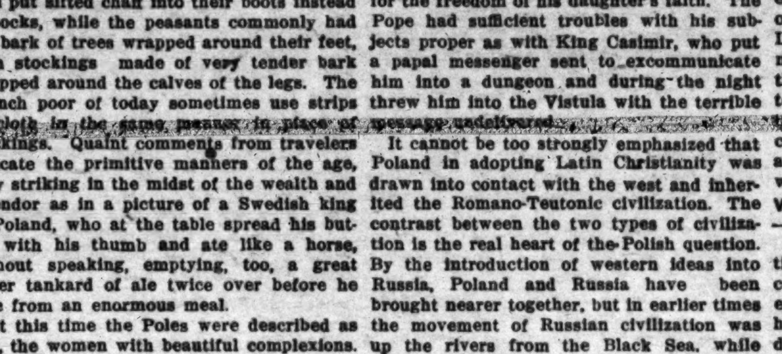
The real Poles were members of the nobility who lived on their estates, each with a small army of his own. It was the custom for them to attend the Diet accompanied by 600 to 1000 horsemen whose presence led frequently to bloodshed. The rebellious attitude of these princes weakened the ruler and the country in its efforts to stand against foreign aggression. Besides the greater nobles, the lesser nobles stood haughtily upon all their privileges. Travelers report that some of the ordinary gentry were seen plowing barefooted, but proudly wearing ancient swords suspended by a string, as it was the privilege of none but nobles to be so armed.

The dirt and misery of the peasant homes made a woeful contrast with the gorgeous dress and boisterous hospitality of the manor houses. The dress of the nobles was very rich; in the time of Sobieski it was the fashion for the men to wear rich cloaks lined with sable within and without; lace point, perukes, and jeweled swords and caps adorned these magnificent robes. It was the custom to have many of these extravagant costumes at once, sometimes to the number of fifty. The servants who at night carried white wax flambeaux before the carriages, must also be as well dressed as possible. The footmen stood behind their masters at table, receiving food passed back to them, wherefore it was the custom to close the doors and find all the plate before the guests passed out.

Customs of the Gentry.

Ordinary gentry and some of the great men put sifted chaff into their boots instead of socks, while the peasants commonly had the bark of trees wrapped around their feet, with stockings made of very tender bark wrapped around the calves of the legs. The French poor of today sometimes use strips of cloth in the same manner in place of stockings. Quaint comments from travelers indicate the primitive manners of the age, very striking in the midst of the wealth and splendor as in a picture of a Swedish king in Poland, who at the table spread his butter with his thumb and ate like a horse, without speaking, emptying, too, a great silver tankard of ale twice over before he rose from an enormous meal.

At this time the Poles were described as fair, the women with beautiful complexions. The hair was pale yellow, and worn by the warlike princes as a tuft on top of the head, the rest being shaved. The Poles never lived above stairs, nor were the houses united but instead were arranged to form a circle or a square, a type persisting today.



St Jure's. Lemberg

There were wooden hovels for travelers where beds of straw were furnished. French travelers complain of the saffron and heavy spices used in the Polish style of cooking.

By the year 1500 the final blow at the independence of the masses was struck in a law forbidding any but nobles to own land. The nobles, previously frugal, now became rich and luxurious. For the murder of a peasant a fine was the only penalty, the old law valuing a serf at ten marks or about twelve shillings; for a Jew double the amount. An observer says: "The common sort of people were like slaves or beasts, allowed no more than will serve to keep them alive and in such case as they may be able to labor again."

This disastrous social condition, the degradation of the masses and the extravagance of the nobles, was further complicated by the presence of the Jews between whom and the Poles there was constant conflict. They and the Germans, in the absence of a middle class, were left to monopolize trade, a nobleman disdaining to enter it. The Jews were usually stewards to the nobles as well as proprietors of the miserable inns. They were forced to wear a yellow cape something like the yellow pieces of felt sewn on the breast in mediaeval England.

The religious differences do not make a prosy theological chronicle but color every situation that arose; had to do with the royal marriages, with every conflict and battle. Culturally Europe had been divided between the two groups which received Christianity from Rome, and from Constantinople. Most of the Slavic people were on the eastern circuit, the Poles being the most important exception. German missionaries went among the Poles about the tenth century giving us our earliest records of these people.

Helen the Mediator.

Religious conflicts furnish lively reading, as in the case of Helen, the daughter of Ivan III of Russia, a member of the Eastern Church who had to keep the peace between her father, her husand. who was a Roman Catholic and the Polish king, and the Pope, who said she must either be converted or repudiated. After a period of warfare, she brought about a six years' truce with her father, who provided in the treaty of peace for the freedom of his daughter's faith. The Pope had sufficient troubles with his subjects proper as with King Casimir, who put a papal messenger sent to excommunicate him into a dungeon and during the night threw him into the Vistula with the terrible message undelivered.

It cannot be too strongly emphasized that Poland in adopting Latin Christianity was drawn into contact with the west and inherited the Romano-Teutonic civilization. The contrast between the two types of civilization is the real heart of the Polish question. By the introduction of western ideas into Russia, Poland and Russia have been brought nearer together, but in earlier times the movement of Russian civilization was up the rivers from the Black Sea, while Polish civilization flowed up the rivers from the Baltic. Thus the two streams did not meet emphasizing the separateness of the two peoples.

There was a large tract of debatable land between Russia and Poland so marshy and impenetrable that little trade or intercourse existed between the two countries. The enmity between these two peoples, the most important feature of Polish life, had not yet developed and they lived together in friendship. German and Scandinavian adventures played an important part in this early history of the country. In the eleventh century, Boleslaw the Brave created a great Polish state reaching from the Elbe to the Dnieper and from the Baltic to the Danube. By the end of the twelfth century the Poles had repudiated German claims to their country but a great migration of the Germans eastward had filled up the Polish cities and pushed the German boundary line from the Elbe to far beyond the Oder, forming a great German block permanently in what had been Slavic territory.

The crusading order of the Teutonic Knights, a German order founded by the Pope to take care of pilgrims to Jerusalem, came to be a great international organization of fighters recruited from all parts of the world. They conquered the Prussians, a Lithuanian people, and built up a vigorous power between the Poles and the Baltic which developed into the modern Prussia.

Poland, besides defeating this powerful army of knights, was able to conquer the Lithuanians, a non-Slavic people who had adopted western ideas and had conquered large parts of Russia. After a period of warfare, the two countries were united under one ruler but there was much restlessness because of religious and racial differences, and long complications with Russia over this area. In 1600 this Polish-Lithuanian state was one of the largest and most powerful in Europe, notwithstanding the fact that the Cossacks deserted Poland to place themselves under Russian protection. From the middle of the seventeenth century until the first partition Poland stood as a first class power with her previously wavering boundary lines fairly stable.,

Why Poland Fell.

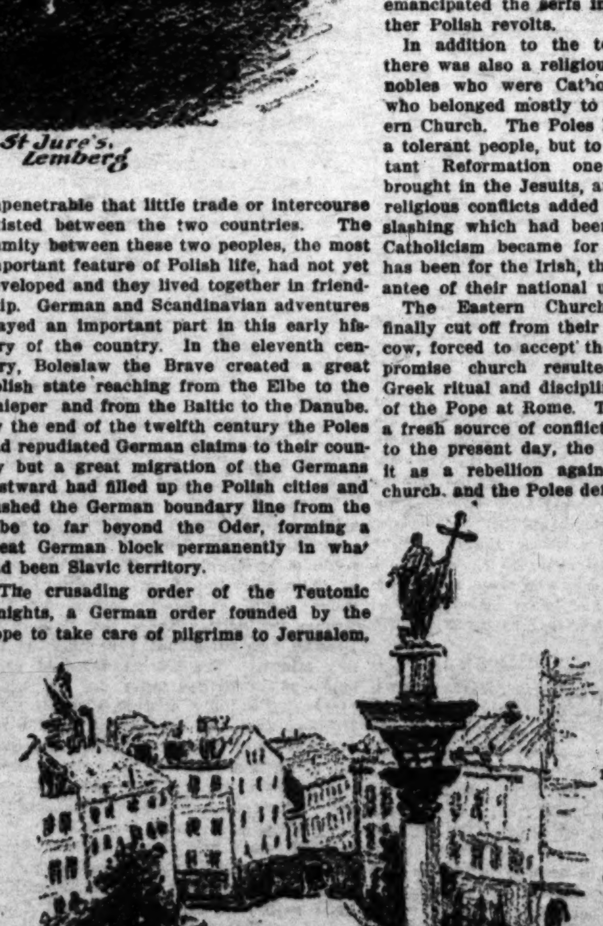
The extraordinary fate of Poland, her extinction after 800 years as an independent country in the society of nations, demands explanation. Her territory was princely, her people warlike. The chief cause of her downfall is to be found in the fact that the Poles like the Turks were a conquering people who did not amalgamate the conquered. There was no Polish melting pot as in the Norman conquest of England or the Frankish conquest of Gaul. Throughout the days of Polish independence the avaricious nobles utterly failed to identify their interests with those of the masses of the people. Wherever Polish power was extended, the free cultivators of the soil became the serfs of the nobles or fled the country as did the spirited Cossacks. Wherever the Polish arms went this degradation of the lower classes fell like a blight upon the land.

There was no middle class to uphold the government; the serfs were too miserable to have any feeling of patriotism, the nobles too turbulent and selfish. Practically nothing was done to better conditions until the time of our own Civil War when Russia emancipated the serfs in order to stop further Polish revolts.

In addition to the terrible social gulf, there was also a religious gulf between the nobles who were Catholics and the serfs who belonged mostly to the Orthodox Eastern Church. The Poles had originally been a tolerant people, but to oppose the Protestant Reformation one of their kings brought in the Jesuits, and thereafter fierce religious conflicts added to the fighting and slashing which had been continual before. Catholicism became for the Poles what it has been for the Irish, the symbol and guarantee of their national unity and being.

The Eastern Church members were finally cut off from their archbishop in Moscow, forced to accept the Pope and a compromise church resulted, combining the Greek ritual and discipline with recognition of the Pope at Rome. This church became a fresh source of conflict with Russia down to the present day, the Russians regarding it as a rebellion against their own true church, and the Poles defending it as a symbol of Polish predominance.

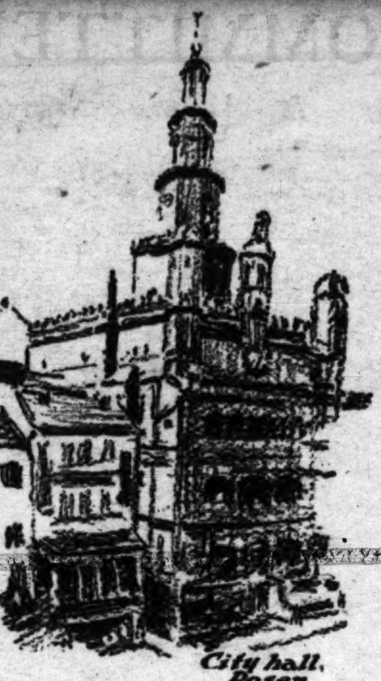
While the Polish-Lithuanian state was the creation of a series of great warriors and rulers the majority of the kings were not strong enough to subdue the unruly nobles. The Jagiellos, who ruled for 300 years with an interlude or two, were kings who led agitated lives and who could have sympathized with a successor who shed tears over his election, resisting the choice, and the distress of presiding over a people who did not respect authority.



Castle Square, Warsaw

The selfish princes kept Poland in a state like that of England during the Wars of the Roses. Sobieski, who had a great genius for war, said bitterly on his deathbed that he would make no arrangements for his future, "the public iniquity, tumult, and violence" being so great that he could command no order while he was alive and active.

When the national parliament was established about 1550, there seemed promise of a normal development for this unhappy country, but unfortunately, the kingship became elective, and the members of the Diet occupied themselves with fighting each other and guarding their own selfish interests. With the decline of the power of the king and of parliament, Poland fell more and more into anarchy. The strange idea that a vote to be effective must be unanimous blocked all legislation and a single deputy could dissolve the Diet. The minority was frequently killed or driven out, until the wary man, in vetoing a law, mounted his horse and rode for his life. This free veto was cherished as the most valuable feature of Polish liberty and all efforts to bring the people to their senses and to a majority rule failed dismally. This extravagant individualism seemed an innat characteristic of the people.



City hall, Posen

Sobieski, the Hero.

It was inevitable that a state so divided against itself would be destroyed the moment better organized monarchies could give it their attention. One moment of great glory came before the shameful partitioning. In 1683 King John Sobieski, whose reign was one of continual warfare, led the Polish warriors to the relief of Vienna and so saved Europe from the Turk. The beautiful Polish cavalry arrived just as the men and women warriors within the rich city could hold out no longer, and the most famous siege in history was raised. The list of the rich spoils reads like an Arabian Night's dream; there were 100,000 tents, gorgeous jewels, carpets, all the extravagant trappings and wealth of the luxurious Turks left in the retreat. The Grand Vizier's private court occupied the space of a large city and was filled with baths, gardens, tropical birds and innumerable gorgeous green silk tents magnificently equipped.

When this hero, Sobieski, died, Poland too was dead. A century of decline followed marked by terrible fighting over the historic battle sites. Cracow, Warsaw and Lemberg were taken in the struggle which the Saxon Kings had to meet with Charles XII of Sweden and Peter of Russia whacking each other from frontier to frontier of the unhappy country. There were two Polish factions, each supporting a candidate to the throne, and the two foreign enemies backed these rivals. Some of the chief actors were broken on the wheel and the plague followed the war as another terror.

In the end Poland was not conquered but partitioned, divided up among her neighbors "like a thing ownerless and dead."

At the end of twenty years of fighting in which Poland was the battleground of Saxons, Swedes and Russians, Poland was so exhausted that her king desperately suggested a division of the country, but the hour had not yet struck. The partitions took place under Catherine of Russia. This German princess, who ascended the throne over the body of her murdered husband, came to an agreement with Frederick of Prussia to place a Polish puppet, one of Catherine's admirers, on the throne. A rebellion shortly broke out and led to Frederick's proposal that Russia, Austria and Prussia make a partition of Polish territory. These powers stated that they would enforce their claims upon Poland in order "to restore public tranquility," the most famous phrase in the field of diplomatic robbery.

The Polish Diet was forced to consent and each of the three robbers took a slice, leaving a large part of Poland intact. The infatuated nobles who had been as unconscious of the ruin of their country as the French nobility on the eve of the Revolution had at last awakened, and although divided into monarchists and republicans, had given Poland an improved constitution in 1791. Prussia and Russia, however, soon forced a second partition in 1793, leaving an independent remnant, and two years later, in the third partition between the three powers, Poland was completely devoured and extinguished.

In these later years Kosciusko, who distinguished himself in the American Revolution at the battle of Saratoga and as Governor of West Point on the Hudson, where Washington placed him as a brigadier-general, had led the Polish forces against the partitioning powers. When the partitions were over, Prussia had acquired great districts, including Warsaw. Austria had seized Galicia and Little Poland, and Russia had the rest. On October 10, 1795, independent Poland ended and has never been revived.

The Goeben and the Breslau.

was made. There was lack of authority for the tug to be ordered out; there was an order necessary for the anchorage, and there was much time needed. In desperation the Egyptian officer went to the Germans for help. There was not only a tug available, but the yacht was towed to a safe resting place in the harbor with a sort of "Just mention me if any one troubles you!" And sure enough; when the Turks inquired by what right the Egyptians were there, the latter were let well alone at the mention of German authority.

German Energy and Moslem Inefficiency.

The Goeben's commander, in speaking of the Turkish naval forces, said that in trying to make the Turks act in stroke with the Germans, the latter had been through a most trying and excruciating test of patience. One can imagine that a mixture of Teutonic energy and Moslem procrastination would breed anything but brotherly love and harmony. "These Turk sailors," he said, "can never understand why, when you tell them to do something now, that it can't just as well be done tomorrow afternoon."

This commander was once asked what was done on board the German ships to induce the men to acquire the knowledge necessary for petty officers' work. The answer was typically illustrative of German methods: "We order them to do it!"

During the early part of the war the attitude of the German military forces in Turkey towards Americans was that of particular cordiality. An instance occurred to illustrate it at the time of an American national holiday. Foreign ships present in the harbor were invited to join the American stationaire in dressing ship in honor of the occasion. The Goeben was then anchored several miles up the Bosphorus. It so happened that, being stripped for action, she had no American flag on board. Nevertheless, a man was sent all the way down to the city, in spite of the late hour at which word was received, to procure from headquarters the desired flag.

During the first boarding visits on the Breslau by the writer, the receptions were even more hospitable than naval officers habitually extend to visitors calling officially. The German officers at that time were quite noticeably indoctrinated with the desire to spread amoug Americans the propaganda that Japan was preparing to make war against the United States, and that the only logical and safe course for America was to unite with Germany. One heard of the most ridiculous rumors about the preparations Japan was making. Along with the particular courtesy displayed during the boarding calls, these ideas of Japan were invariably introduced. The writer will always cherish the memory of one good bottle of champagne, entirely wasted on such propaganda on board the Breslau.

Undoubtedly many of the silly rumors afloat in the United States about the same time could be traced to German origin. The whole idea was provoking. It seems mediaeval enough for a modern nation to covet and seek to take by force the territory of its neighbors, without attempting to entrap other nations to do part of the work for them.

The entrance of Turkey into the war had far-reaching results:

(1.) A Russian fleet was tied up in the Black Sea.

(2.) The passage of Russian grain to the Allies was throttled.

(3.) The Allies lost the campaign at Gallipoli, including several battleships.

(4.) The Mesopotamian campaign was forced upon England

(5.) The political effect on the Balkans aided in bringing Bulgaria against the Allies and keeping Greece out of the war. There were about 2,000,000 Greeks in Turkey who would have been put in danger by the entry of Greece against Turkey.

(6.) England was forced to throw enough troops into Egypt to prevent the occupation by Turks of the Suez Canal.

(7.) Russia was forced to send armies to the Caucasus Mountains.

(8.) A large part of the Armenian nation perished.

The sum of these losses is considerable. If one battle cruiser has been directly instrumental in causing them, one is obliged to credit her with proportional importance.

Conclusion.

The activities of the Goeben emphasize a few principles of naval warfare:

(1.) The imperative value of quick and reliable communication with all naval forces upon or before the declaration of war. The Goeben's early notification of war played a big part in her escape.

(2.) The value to a navy of cruisers that are capable of high speed and are fitted for independent work.

(3.) The value of the offensive. Instead of looking for a safe retreat from superior forces, the Goeben first deceived her enemies by attacking the Barbary coast, and second, by seeking in Turkish waters further activities that were wholly unexpected by the Allies.

(4.) The value of high speed. This factor was important in the escape from the Mediterranean. In the Black Sea it was the one advantage that made it possible for the Germans to carry on their raids and convoy work.

(5:) The importance of a naval officer's knowledge of international affairs. The Allies lost from the lack of knowledge of political conditions in Turkey that would have caused them to suspect and prepare for the Goeben's dash to the Dardanelles. The Germans, on the other hand, made gain of the political conditions that they had been instrumental in making. Also, the advantage to a world power is brought out of having for each important maritime country a few naval officers that are thoroughly versed and trained in the politics, language and military conditions of that country.

In conclusion, a comparison of possible value may be drawn from the Bosphorus and the Panama Canal. The control of the commercial routes of another country indirectly forced Turkey into war. For many years that control had exercised a continual pressure to throw Russia into war against Turkey. The Germans planned to take full advantage of that tendency. The Goeben was one of the visible agents employed in making the plan effective. The cruiser was strongly illustrative of a connecting link between international politics and naval warfare. A knowledge of foreign politics was of extreme value to her officers. To American naval officers the importance of international affairs is bound to increase. As the commercial and strategic sea lanes of Russia and Rumania lead through the Bosphorus, so do sea lanes of most of the great powers of the world lead through the Panama Canal. As naval stations and international sea traffic develop in the Caribbean, so will America be forced to meet with complex political and military conditions. And whether they can or cannot be amicably settled, the navy will hold an intimate relation with them all. It, therefore, seems that to American officers a knowledge not only of their own country's position in the Caribbean, but of all other powers, will be of particular interest.

India Doesn't Want Home Rule.

and keeping posted this enormous Moslem population.

Great India on the Way to War.

I wish the people of America—at least those of them whose knowledge of India has never got beyond the print in the old missionary books, of a Hindu woman on the banks of the Ganges, depicted in the act of throwing her babe at the open jaws of a crocodile, and so, in consequence see nothing incongruous in the statements of these Bengali agitators—could have witnessed, first-hand, an amazing spectacle, that unfortunately was granted to a mere handful of persons, other than those actively concerned in it. For, we were only a small passenger list on the S.S. City of London, anchored just outside Port Said Harbor, on October 4, 1914, who watched from the upper deck, the fifty-one transports from India, as they filed through the Suez Canal on their way to Marseilles, to discharge their troops, en route for the front. The ships were packed to the rails with native troops; splendid Sikhs, Gurkhas—"the little brown men" from Nepal, uncanny terrors in the Germans, with their murderous kukris; tall fierce Pathans from Afghanistan, with restless, half-insolent eyes; handsome Rajputs of Rajputana, descendants of the "Sun-born Kings," bearing themselves proudly as befitting India's great warrior caste. All night we watched this strange panorama with its grim significance. First, the traveling searchlight, as though feeling its way, then the hulls appeared—great shapes literally climbing up out of the desert—dark and awesome, slowly to round the bend, and fade away into the night.

The next morning we anchored again at Ismailia, where the canal widens into the Bitter Lakes, to await the passing of fifteen more troopships from India, carrying British soldiers; "Tommy" hard and fit, without an ounce of superfluous flesh on him, his face, under his solah-topee, bronzed to the color of his khaki uniform, by years of exposure to a tropical sun. How he cheered, as he eyed wistfully the steamer just "out from home!"

Port Said Harbor was massed with warships. Among them the French battleship Bouvet, the first to be sunk in the Dardanelles, was waiting to escort a line of transports due from India, and, occupying valuable space, were fourteen interned German vessels, with sulky crews glowering over their sides.

Never did the beautiful harbor of Bombay present so strange a sight—ships were lying waiting to receive the constant khaki-colored stream, recruited from all parts of the Indian Empire. Maharajas and Princes who only the day before had scores of courtiers and servants at command, with costly robes and jewels doffed for the simple khaki uniform, passed up the gang plank shoulder to shoulder with British officers, sped on their way, as were their forebears of old, with cries of "Shabash! Shabash!" (Well done! Well done!) Not since the days of the Great Mutiny had there been such uprisings in India—only this time it was not against the British Raj—it was for England and England's flag.

In recent years, when thousands of tourists were visiting it each year, it has become no longer good form to allude to the people of India as "heathen"—although the name was never as bad as it sounds, meaning simply a "dweller on the heath"—but rather as land of ancient wisdom and lofty ideals, with civilization buried under the restless sands of its five rivers that was old before America was discovered, or Rome was built; a civilization that grew out of the great four-fold caste system.

Great Britain is a long way on the road to overcoming what seem to people of other lands as insurmountable obstacles. Already the Hindu and Mohammedan rulers of the native states have been called in council with the Viceroy, a progressive movement that is going to unite the spiritual, the social, the economic and the protective rights of all three races, into a solid and harmonious government for India. The exact details of this proposed system of government are not at present forthcoming—due to stress of war—but the officials in high authority over all concerned say that a unique and new India is going to awaken—after war is over.

TOILERS DEMAND BEER OF ONTARIO'S PREMIER.

Great Demonstration in the City of Toronto, with Threats of Strike from Coast to Coast.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

TORONTO (Ont.) March 2.—A large procession of workmen marched to the Parliament buildings today and asked for an increase in the strength of prohibition beer. The request was refused by the provincial Premier, Sir William Hearst, who was "booed" by the crowd. The request was that 2½ per cent. of alcohol instead of 2½ per cent. proof spirits be established as the legal strength.

SOME ANXIETY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

TORONTO, March 2.—There is some anxiety in the ranks of the prohibition advocates in Canada over the stand that is being taken by labor with regard to beer and temperance beer and the monster parade and deputation of workingmen which waited today on Sir Edward Hearst, Premier of Ontario. The demonstration furthers the belief that a bitter battle will be fought in the near future between the "wets" and the "drys."

That the workers have entered the arena and intend to put up a hard fight is evidenced by the huge newspaper advertisements which have appeared calling upon the men to band themselves together to change the standard of beer from 2½ per cent. proof spirits to 2½ per cent. alcohol.

In these advertisements it is pointed out that not one of the warring nations, aside from Canada, has adopted total prohibition and that Great Britain, the first of this year, increased the output of the breweries by 33 per cent. in order that the workingmen might have their beer.

Included in the demonstration today were the members of the great war veterans' association and returned soldiers. The parade met at the central armories at 2 o'clock and proceeded to the provincial government buildings.

Much is heard on all sides today regarding the deputation and it is said the men will take nothing but a decisive answer. One authority made the statement that if the raised standard is not granted the men would take the matter in their own hands and that a strike from coast to coast would be the result. However, this statement is from one section only, but is an example of how the feeling is running.

Nothing was said at the mass meeting of the Dominion alliance at which William Jennings Bryan spoke regarding the workingmen's demand but the move is causing the association grave concern.

The alarm of the prohibition party at this time is due to the fact that there is only an order in council in force restraining the sale of intoxicating liquors during the war but no permanent prohibition legislation.

The matter will come before the people, it is thought, within a short time and the present scuffle is only a preliminary move before the big battle over prohibition legislation which will follow.

THE GREAT WAR. The tentative proposals for Japanese intervention in Siberia because of the Russian situation have not culminated in any definite decision by the Allies, so far as the current advices reveal. London dispatches mention a growing tendency there to discuss the situation fully and await developments, particularly the attitude the United States may assume. China is also involved in this situation, and press dispatches from that country report political unsettlement there because of it. Raids of growing intensity and frequency on the Franco-Belgian front are furnishing the chief features of military interest, particularly in view of the increasing degree of American participation in the fighting. Larger issues, however, are involved in the Russian situation, the uncertainties of which are giving rise to manifold military and political complications.

The peace negotiations between the Bolsheviki and the Germans seem to have been broken off. Manifestly, at any rate, there is developing a growing measure of belligerency among the Russian proletariat, who, with the safety of the revolution as a rallying cry, are reported to be responding from all sides to support it.

NOT FAIR TO WOMEN

Sharp Criticism by MacCracken.

"They are not Doing Their Duty by Their Country," He Declares.

Vassar President Excoriates Those Who Make Fashion of the War.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, March 2.—American women "are not doing their duty by their country, but are wasting time and effort in ineffectual forms of war work," Dr. Henry Noble MacCracken, president of Vassar College, said in a statement tonight, announcing that a mass meeting for college women will be held here next Friday to appeal to them to become trained nurses for "urgent military and public health service."

What he termed the willingness of many American women to go "over there" as unskilled nurses or futile social workers and "inflict upon their brothers and the women and children of their Allies the lamentable effects of their ignorance," was condemned in Dr. MacCracken's statement.

THE FASHION.

"The volunteer organizations," he said, "are full of women who go to workrooms, not from patriotic instinct, but because it is the fashion and they have never been trained to obey or to work under supervision. For every volunteer who is willing to sacrifice her whole life scheme indefinitely for the sake of her country, there are 10,000 who are willing to give an hour a week of volunteer service with no real training, and of precious little value."

THE VITAL NEED.

"The one great vital need of a nation at war is health and the two vital professions are, therefore, education for health standards and nursing for preventive and remedial measures. Both professions need leaders in unlimited numbers."

Similar meetings will be held in at least twenty cities throughout the country in the next few weeks, the statement says, including Boston, Chicago, New Haven, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Denver and San Francisco. They will be addressed by Dr. MacCracken, Julian Lathrop, Jane Delano and other prominent men and women.

Dr. MacCracken estimates that 20,000 trained nurses will be needed for the American forces in France before January, 1919.

PRESIDENTS OF SAN FRANCISCO WILL MAKE AN APPEAL TO WILSON.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 2.—An appeal on behalf of 6000 San Francisco club women, asking clemency for four American soldiers in France sentenced to death for sleeping while on sentry duty, was sent to President Woodrow Wilson tonight following a resolution adopted by the San Francisco City Federation of Women's Clubs.

The telegram said:

"While we realize the need of army discipline, especially in war time, and while we appreciate the breach involved of a sentry falling asleep at his post in the presence of the enemy, nevertheless the San Francisco City Federation of Women's Clubs, representing 6000 women, respectfully appeal to Your Excellency's distinguished sense of humanity to extend clemency to those so accused, particularly in view of Gen. Pershing's references of these cases to you.

"The mothers of America will applaud your leniency."

AMBASSADOR FRANCIS ARRIVES AT VOLOGDA.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—A dispatch received by the State Department today from Ambassador Francis announcing the safe arrival of himself and staff at Vologda last February 28, said the German advance on Petrograd and Moscow was continuing when he left the capital last February 26. The general belief in Petrograd at that time was that the Germans would occupy the city in a few days.

Consul Sumners at Moscow announced in a dispatch received by the State Department today that all Americans had left Moscow as well as Petrograd. He did not indicate to what place they had gone, but it was assumed that many had gone to Vologda.

Foreign Diplomat Urges Allies to Have Utmost Faith in the Mikado.

Tokio Still Awaits Fulfillment of Her Wish for an Expression.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—The responses of the Entente Allies and of America to the Japanese invitation for an expression of their views regarding the Russian situation so far as recent events there have affected conditions in Eastern Siberia, are expected to be returned within the next two or three days. It is certain that there will be no long delay as there appears to be no disposition to enter into any extended arguments on the subject of measures to combat German aggression in Siberia and to protect the military stores at Vladivostok.

FOREIGN VIEW.

One distinguished foreign representative said today that a situation has developed where the Allies and America must place entire confidence in the rectitude of purpose and military ability of Japan. This belief is that there can be no half confidence such as would be implied by a demand for a pledge from Japan in advance of any actions she may contemplate, to limit her activities or to make certain dispositions of occupied territory after the war. Such action, he said, would cast suspicion upon a devoted and powerful ally.

SOME INQUIRIES.

It is entirely possible that some inquiries may be made to develop the nature and extent of what Japan regards as the special German menace that existed in Eastern Siberia even before the resumption of the German drive against Russia. Aside from the presence of a large number of German prisoners of war in Central Siberia, nothing officially is known here of any new and threatening danger to Japan or to her allies unless such might be found in active German propaganda in that section, which might involve the transfer of allegiance to Germany of the Bolsheviki-controlled population, or cause an outbreak of absolute anarchy which would threaten the lives and property of Japanese and other foreign residents in Siberia. It is not doubted that Japan is now satisfying her allies on this point and consequently there will be no necessity for any formal engagement or declaration of purpose by Japan covering her aims in Siberia, beyond any such expression as she might herself care to volunteer.

NO CONFIRMATION.

Reports reaching Washington and credited to British newspapers, that already Japanese and Chinese troops have been sent into Asiatic Russia, find no confirmation here. They are believed to be founded upon previous reports that Japanese marines had been landed at Vladivostok to suppress disorders there of an anarchistic turn that threatened the safety of the military stores at the port. It is known that there are four large Japanese cruisers at Vladivostok but as they have been there for some time officials said their presence could not be construed as indicating any new policy. As for the report that Chinese troops have been sent into Siberia, officials are convinced that this is based on a misunderstanding of the movement of some Chinese soldiers into Harbin, which, being in Chinese Manchuria, is properly a subject for Chinese military control. So far as can be learned here, the attitude of the Chinese government has been marked by reluctance to join in any international campaign in Manchuria.

RUSSIAN FEELING.

There has been a notable omission to develop the feelings of the Russians themselves towards any disturbance of status in Siberia. However, a report reached Washington from an apparently reliable source today that the Russians themselves are desirous, if there is to be any foreign entry into Siberia, that America, above all powers, should participate.

In the view of some officials this probably is based upon a belief that America's participation would insure a complete evacuation of the country after the purposes of a military expedition had been served.

In connection with the proposed military expedition into Siberia, attention has been directed again to aspirations voiced by the Siberians some time ago for their separation from Russia, following the lead of Finland, Ukrainia and other West Russian provinces. One official said today that Japan would be completely satisfied, after insuring a regime of law and order in Siberia, to lend her support to the creation there of an independent republic that would constitute a buffer state between Japan and Russia and thereby remove any apprehension of a war of reprisals based on the victory of Japan a decade ago.

BERNHARDT'S THEATER LOSES A FAIR CHARMER.

Police Hold Woman Who, Separated from Husband, Talked with Him by Phone.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

PARIS, March 2.—After Premiers, Ministers and journalists, the theatrical profession is now drawn into scandal. Pretty Suzy Depsy of the Sarah Bernhardt Theater has fallen into the big net thrown out by French authorities to catch all persons having had dealings with the enemy.

For several days it was known here that a well-known actress had been arrested under a charge of intelligence with the enemy, but the censor had forbidden any names mentioned and many persons thought the actress was Eve Lavilliere, who, it was reported some time ago had given up the stage for the convent.

The authorities, however, permitted the rumor to be denied concerning the famous artist.

In reality, Suzy Depsy had been under arrest for several days and today her accomplices joined her. Among the latter is her husband, from whom she lived separately, she occupying the first floor in a fashionable part of Paris, while he lived on the fifth floor. The only communication they had with each other, it is said, was by telephone. Inquiry into this latest affair is intrusted to Capt. Bouchardon, Judge Advocate of the Third Paris Court Martial, who already has the Humbert, Lenoir, De Souches and Caillaux scandals in hand.

German Raiders Get Severe Drubbing in Hand-to-hand Fighting.

BY LINCOLN EYRE.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

AMERICAN FRONT IN FRANCE, March 2.—The first American officer to be killed in action was shot at close range by a German raider northwest of Toul yesterday morning. Immediately the German was killed by another American officer.

The Germans received a severe drubbing and returned to their own place, sadder but wiser. They not only left behind three prisoners and nineteen dead, including a captain and a lieutenant, but were thoroughly beaten in the hand-to-hand fighting which raged fiercely throughout that section of the trenches which they attempted to sweep.

The enemy also was caught in the American barrage in No Man's Land when trying to retire and suffered more losses.

It was the result of taking a stitch in time that the raid had been expected in about the place where it occurred. Everyone had been warned, so infantry was lined up in readiness and the artillery started the barrage less than a minute after the Germans started theirs, continuing the fire steadily and rapidly for hours. Though heavily shelled, the American general commanding this front expressed the view of all concerned when he went to a hospital ward filled with the wounded and gassed men and said:

"We've squared up for the gas attack. The boys did fine work."

One German prisoner said the Americans were too quick for him and that he was obliged to be out of it.

The Germans attacked in force, first blowing gaps in the barbed wire with heavy charges, then sending a party of 220 men, partly volunteers, to try to encircle the Americans by attacking on the flank through a small valley. The Americans used their rifles with deadly effect and fought at close quarters with bombs and bayonets. They forced the Germans out into No Man's Land and themselves suffered losses, naturally, but, considering the fact that such a raid almost invariably is successful, the losses were agreeably light. The men acquitted themselves well, both in the actual fighting and in the preliminary bombardment, which was participated in by the heavy German guns, evidently put into position especially for this raid, including the naval guns.

NEW ENGLAND TROOPS DEFEAT ENEMY FORCES.

Attack of "Shockers" is Repulsed with Losses on Both Sides—Americans Take Four Men Prisoners.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Friday, March 1.—Another German raid on the American line was made at 9:30 o'clock last night in the Chemin Des Dames sector. After sharp fighting the enemy retired, leaving four prisoners, two of whom were wounded.

The Americans lost some killed and a number slightly wounded or missing. All are New Englanders.

Three companies of shock troops, one of which had been brought from Laon by motor cars for the attack, came up behind a heavy barrage which had been put down along the left flank of the American forces.

The American and French artillery effectively countershelled the enemy during the attack, which was localized, and during his retirement.

It is not permitted to disclose the number of American casualties. One of the prisoners captured said this was the beginning of a series of similar raids on a large scale along the western front.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, March 2.—The three recent raids, one in the Toul sector and two along the Chemin des Dames, have demonstrated that the American soldier, notwithstanding his previous experience, now is perfectly at home in a gas mask and able to fight just as well with as without it. In so quickly reaching this stage the Americans have shown their unusual adaptability. Gas was used in all three attacks and in just sufficient quantities to make masks necessary, as the Germans in their raids did not desire to encounter quantities of their own gas.

When the engagement at Toul began virtually all the Americans were masked. Some few of the men, however, are reported to have taken a chance when the German infantry attacked, pulling off their masks for freer action. One officer risked his life to give commands to his men during the roar of explosions. He was unable to talk through his mask to make his men hear, so he pulled it off and yelled his orders. As it happened, there was no gas in the particular section, but he did not know it. The officer was willing to sacrifice his own life to get his men to a place of safety where they also could strike effectively at the enemy. There were many other instances of personal bravery. A lieutenant, a sergeant and two privates were in a dugout when some Germans looked in. One cried in good English, "Come out, Americans!"

The four Americans blazed away with their automatics, then rushed the entrance to stumble over the bodies of the men, whom they had apparently killed by the quick resistance.

During bombardment which hardly could have been more terrific two men who were concealed in a shell hole were buried by dirt thrown by another exploding projectile. They shouted for help and it came quickly. Their comrades left the shelters, from which they were ready to leap into action the moment the attacking infantry appeared, and exhumed the buried soldiers with stones, mud, earth, pieces of trees and shell splinters spattered about them.

Notwithstanding the fierceness of the fight at close quarters, not more than one bayonet was used, and this one on a German. The Americans, using their automatic pistols, sent bullets into the German attackers with good aim in spite of the excitement. Rifle bullets accounted for many more.

Although the army has been cursing the weather and the mud for days, there is one man in the line today who is glad it was muddy, for he owes his life to the slippery "duckboard" on the flooring in the trenches. With pistol in hand, he rounded a trench corner looking for the Germans. A burly Prussian saw him first and fired, but at the same moment the American slipped and fell on his face. The Prussian thought him dead and turned away. He was quickly dropped, in his tracks by the prone American, who fired accurately from the trench bottom.

There were men in the fight from virtually all the States, from New York to Texas. With one or two exceptions, the wounded are expected to recover.

Some of the American dead were buried in a cemetery back of the lines during the night while friendly and hostile shells roared overhead. A thick, wet snow now is falling and melting as soon as it touches the mud.

The bodies of the Americans slain in the fighting north of Chemin des Dames have been buried near where they fell, their French and American comrades participating in impressive ceremonies.

AMERICAN GAS DEFENSE IS BEST IN EXISTENCE.

Barbarous Weapon Depends on Surprise to Accomplish Purpose.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Recent American casualties in a gas attack illustrated the experience of all the European armies that the success of the barbarous weapon revived by the Germans largely is dependent on surprise since improved masks have eliminated all danger if the men have time to put them on. The Americans were caught asleep, or before they were able to adjust their masks, which a statement tonight by the gas defense service of the medical department declared to be the most efficient in existence.

Gas masks now are being manufactured at a rate which assures an ample supply for the troops abroad and for training at home, said the service statement. Many factories turning from peace to war work are producing masks of the approved type, and in addition a government plant employing 4000 persons soon will be in operation to do the more difficult sewing operations on the face piece.

The determination of the government that no American shall go into the trenches without full equipment will prevent the harrowing experiences suffered by the Canadians at Ypres in April, 1915, when the Germans first called to their aid the weapon outlawed by all civilized nations subscribing to The Hague convention.

Cotton fabric, carefully rubberized, cut to fit various types of faces, forms the face piece of the American mask and is held in place by elastic bands over the head. The ears are left uncovered, and sight is provided through celluloid or glass eyepieces. A canister filled with secret chemicals is carried in a small knapsack and connected with a flexible tube which goes into the soldier's mouth. A nose clamp forces the wearer to breathe through his mouth, the air being taken in through the canister and any gas rendered harmless by the absorbent chemicals. Outgoing breath passes through a small rubber valve in the face piece.

Mere provision of masks is only the beginning of the defense system, however, as the men must be trained to know when a gas attack is coming and to adjust their masks in six seconds or less. An alarm is given by horns, whistles or rattles. The mask is carried in a knapsack at the left hip, the supporting straps being shortened when a danger zone is entered so that the masks rest on the chest at the "alert." A soldier has merely to open the knapsack, pull out the flexible hose with the face piece attached, put the rubber mouthpiece in his mouth and adjust the bands over his head. The nose clip can be placed in position after the mask is on.

READY FOR A CONCERT

BY FREDERIC C. HOWE.

United States Commissioner of Immigration at New York.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

NEW YORK, March 1.—It has been nearly sixty years since the United States has held any prisoners on American soil. And the prisoners of the Civil War were our own people split asunder by the strife over slavery. Already there are approximately 2500 German prisoners in the United States. They are not captives in battle. They have never seen the trenches, but a portion of them were active participants in the war as officers and seamen on the German sea-raider Prinz Eitel Friedrich, which ventured into Hampton Roads for coal and supplies in July, 1914. But the great majority of our prisoners of war are officers and sailors, the stewards and employees of the German merchant vessels which were seized by our government immediately on the declaration of war and men who are held as suspects who have been arrested in various parts of the country.

There were twenty-nine merchant ships which had been in the harbor of New York since September, 1914. They had on board about 1100 Germans who were taken from the ships and interned at Ellis Island. There were other German ships at Boston, Porto Rico, Panama, while over fifty Germans were brought across the Pacific to New York from the harbor of Kiaouchou, captured by the Japanese. Since the outbreak of the war, too, German and Austrian subjects, from bankers to stevedores, have been arrested as alien enemies and placed in temporary detention at various places throughout the United States awaiting final action by the government.

WAR METHODS.

We were new in war methods—unprepared for prisoners of war. And whatever the treatment of Germany to American prisoners, the United States determined that German prisoners held here should be treated on the assumption of the President that this was a war not against the German people, but against the rulers of Prussia.

Moreover, the great majority of these prisoners were here on a peaceful errand; they had come in their ships, of which the greatest of all was the Vaterland, now the Leviathan, and were marooned in American waters. They remained by their ships for nearly three years. But they were trained men. Many or all of them were reservists identified with the Fatherland.

The great majority of these prisoners were held for six months at the Ellis Island Immigration Station in New York and on an island in Boston harbor under the jurisdiction of the United States Immigration authorities. The officers and sailors of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich were first taken to Philadelphia and then to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.

Under the provisions of The Hague Tribunal, agreed to by all the powers, prisoners of war have certain rights. They may not be compelled to work at anything that will contribute to the military activities of the government. They are to have means of communication with their friends. If they do any industrial work, they are to be paid on the same schedule of wages as that paid to officers and soldiers of the same grade in the army. The prisoner of war is helpless. He cannot protect himself; and while The Hague Tribunal accomplished little for the prevention of war, it has made provision for the protection of prisoners of war; and Secretary of Labor Wilson, when confronted with the maintenance and care of 2000 German subjects placed under his care, many of whom had wives in this country, decided that the United States should set a standard of prison administration in harmony with the disinterested and nonpunitive war aims of America and so humane that our humanity would serve as a means of protection to American soldiers who might become prisoners of war in German camps, for the neutral nation of Switzerland is the representative of Germany in this matter. She is also the representative of the United States in the protection of American soldiers who may become prisoners in Germany, and the knowledge of our treatment of German interned men is communicated to the Imperial German government, just as the treatment of American prisoners by Germany is communicated to the United States government.

SELECTION.

Hot Springs, in the mountains of North Carolina, was selected as an internment camp for the interned seamen. It lies far from the sea and nestles in the midst of mountain ranges in Western North Carolina. For years it was a medicinal resort patronized by southern people. It is almost surrounded by the French Broad River. It possesses a great hotel capable of accommodating 400 or 500 people and open spaces for the building of barracks.

Other war prisoners are interned at Fort McPherson and Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., where cantonments have been erected similar to those occupied by troops. These camps were built by the Germans under direction of American officers and are surrounded by stockades. Prisoners are supplied with clothing and are adequately protected from inclement weather.

Relays of officers and seamen were transported from New York and Boston to Hot Springs during the summer and early fall months of 1917, and from out the crews of the ships all kinds of mechanicians and artisans were selected. There were electricians and plumbers. Skilled carpenters necessary to keep a ship in condition were found. There were engineers, waiters, cooks, and ordinary laborers, for a seagoing ship is a community in itself. It is self-contained. It has to be ready for every emergency. And the German prisoners were set to work building their own camp. It might be a camp for a few months; it might be for years. The government supplied the lumber. The men supplied the labor, and in a few weeks' time there arose as if by magic a cantonment camp for 1600 men, which was speedily filled from New York, Boston, and other immigration stations.

SEPARATION.

The officers were separated from the men by a city street. Round about each camp are high stockades with barbed-wire fences. Patrols are maintained about the camps on the highways and railroads to prevent escapes.

When the camp was completed there was nothing for the men to do. There was no provision for activities except such sports as the men themselves might devise. A large number were employed in the kitchen; they kept the place in order; some ran the pumping engines; others looked after the water supply, plumbing and electricity. Practically all the work inside the camp is performed by the Germans the food being purchased under the supervision of the director of internment in charge, Mr. Alfred Hampton, of the Bureau of Immigration. The food is good; it costs about 14 cents a meal, to which is added the cost of the German employees paid under The Hague Tribunal provision for wages.

There has been some complaint that the cost is too high; that the prisoners ought not to be fed so well; and that they ought not to have such comfortable houses in which to live. The hotel is used for officers, and the cantonment camps are built like those of American soldiers. Mr. Hampton, the director, replies that "We are not making war on civilian Germans; we are not making war on the German people; certainly we are not making war on those Germans who were in the United States on a commercial errand before the war; and, moreover, the price is little enough for us to pay if it serves as a protection for American boys who may be prisoners of war in Germany."

And the Germans have been permitted to find amusement for themselves. They have developed a life of their own. They developed it and perfected it until what a few months ago was merely an internment camp has now become a center of every kind of activity. On the river banks a German village was laid out. It is suggestive of Old Heidelberg, the crooked streets of Nurnberg, or some little village in the Black Mountains. One almost forgets that one is in the mountains of North Carolina as he walks along the narrow crooked streets of the German village, flanked on either side by artistic playhouses built by the men themselves. The houses are not for living in, although ingenious stoves have been built to keep them warm from stones picked up along the riverside. And the houses themselves are made from scraps of lumber, from broken branches of trees, from little pieces of wood. They are shingled with tin cans and are papered within and tinted at very little expense.

At the head of the roadway is a miniature Gothic church. Its lines are good; it has pews within it, a pulpit, and all the accessories of a church. But it is merely a play church. Not more than twenty men could get inside of it. And it is built from mosaics of scraps gathered together by the men. It is shingled and surfaced on the outside with tin cans flattened out and nailed against scraps of wood. The foundations are stone from the river bottom. The windows are made from scraps or from glass purchased co-operatively by the three or four men who got together for the building of their little houses. Flowers of all kinds were planted, and in a short time the German village was a flower garden. And when this work was completed the men who had constructed these buildings organized classes for study. One of these houses is an artist's studio; two or three are cabinetmaking shops. Some old men are weaving. They are plying all the trades that they learned in their idle hours on shipboard. Wonderful mosaic work made out of cigar boxes is turned out, as are little ships complete in every detail.

On the river bank some one of the sailors found the stump of an old tree protruding. It was converted into a reproduction of an alligator. It protects the approach to the village. The men excavated and built a great swimming pool in the midst of the woods of the camp; they laid out tennis courts; and one artist brought back old medieval Germany, the Germany of Wagner, in the reproduction of a scene from one of Wagner's operas.

The Young Men's Christian Association followed the Germans to Hot Springs, as it has followed our soldiers to their cantonments, and it came with plans for service, with money enough to buy lumber, but no money for labor, and the representative of the Young Men's Christian Association called a number of the German seamen together in their camp and asked them if they would be willing to build a Young Men's Christian Association building if supplied with material and tools. Immediately the men organized a construction squad. They gave their labor gratuitously. They erected a big building probably 200 by 150 feet, artistically designed, as a clubroom and schoolhouse, and immediately all the classes were filled. Four hundred men were immediately enrolled. The Germans produced their own teachers. Classes were established in elementary and advanced English. Other classes were formed in French and in Spanish. Shorthand, geography, chemistry, marine engineering and navigation are taught. All day and all evening these classes are at work studying various subjects.

OTHER CLASSES.

Similar classes were organized in the officers' detention camp. The little playhouses are full all day long with small groups, and the billiard room is used for this purpose. Wherever an empty space was available a class sprang up. A volunteer orchestra was organized, while the Tsing-Tau orchestra of forty-nine pieces was soon giving its Sunday afternoon and mid-weekly concerts on the lawn or in the big recreation building, for among the interns was a distinguished orchestra brought from the fortress of Kiaochow in China. They were part of the Red Cross service, and they have maintained their organization and enlivened the life of the camp with concerts similar to those that one might hear from the Boston Symphony Orchestra or other great orchestras in our cities.

A canteen was opened, run by the Germans. They buy at wholesale and sell at considerably less than we [illegible] at the stores. They demonstrate in a small way how much we are paying the middlemen for supplies. There are barbers, cobblers and clothing shops. A laundry has been opened, and the old building formerly used for medicinal baths has been cleaned up and placed under the charge of an expert from the Vaterland. Here Germans who desire, on the payment of a small fee, take baths and secure treatment as they might at some health resort in Germany. They pay for these services from the small salary which they still receive from the Hamburg-American and North German Lloyd Steamship Companies.

The Young Men's Christian Association has also stationed secretaries and inaugurated work at Fort Oglethorpe and Fort McPherson, Ga., and at Fort Douglas, Utah. They have co-operated heartily with the government and have rendered most valuable service along the lines of work usually carried on by the association — religious, educational, athletic, music and gardening.

The men have imported pets. They raise rabbits. Some of them have their dogs with them. And in the spring they are planning to plant their village—the roadways and little spots of land that have been set aside to them—with vegetables and flowers of all kinds.

Life is irksome in any camp. The men get what the doctors call the "barbed-wire sickness." It affects men's minds to be kept in an inclosure with nothing to do. That is the most serious complaint. When the writer was in Hot Springs the officers and sailors were pleading with the Young Men's Christian Association secretary that they be permitted to build another Young Men's Christian Association camp in order that they might have more classes and more recreation.

There have been but few attempts to escape, and the guarding of the prisoners is relatively easy. Proposals are under consideration for utilizing the men, as well as those at Fort Oglethorpe and Fort McPherson, in the building of roads or for the development of the great forest preserves which the government has acquired all over North Carolina in the Appalachian ranges. It has been suggested that this is an opportunity to develop this wonderful forest preserve into a playground for Eastern America, like the great forest preserves of California and the Yosemite. This could be done without violating The Hague tribunal agreement. It would relieve the tedium of camp life and realize an enduring return to the prisoners and the government in a great road system and mountain park for the people of the South.

"SPEED UP" IS WORD FROM GEN. CROWDER.

GOV. STEPHENS ADVISED THE DRAFT CLASSIFICATION IN STATE FAR BEHIND.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

SACRAMENTO, March 2.—An appeal to "speed up" the work of completing the occupational classification of draft registrants was received today by Gov. William D. Stephens from Provost-Marshal-General E. H. Crowder.

Only about one-third of the work has been completed in California, according to Adjt.-Gen. J. J. Borree, who was directed by the Governor to again urge school teachers throughout the State to volunteer their services to the local exemption boards for this work. Between 1200 and 1300 teachers are needed to rush this work to completion, Gen. Borree said.

Gen. Crowder in urging quick action pointed out in his telegram to Gov. Stephens that the "school teachers of the District of Columbia, by working night and day, had completed the occupational cards of 30,000 registrants there."

VOLUNTARY SYSTEM OF SAVING CAPITAL.

NONESSENTIAL SECURITIES NOT BEING FLOATED WITHOUT FEDERAL SANCTION.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Six weeks' operation of the voluntary system of restricting nonessential capital expenditures under administration of the Federal Reserve Board's Capital Issues Committee have demonstrated its success, members of the committee declared today. There has been no attempt to float large issues of securities without the committee's approval, and the pledged co-operation of the American Bankers' Association, New York Stock Exchange and other financial and general business institutions virtually would make such action impossible, it was believed, even if the moral authority of the government committee were not recognized.

Considerable quantities of stock in oil companies and other ventures not regarded as essential are being sold, however, and it is these on which the government hopes to impose its authority by a system of compulsory regulation of capital issues, provided in the pending war finance corporation bill. The individual issues of oil and other stocks not always regarded as necessary are made in quantities less than $500,000, the minimum of private issues which the Capital Issues Committee will consider, but their aggregate is high, according to reports reaching here.

Paul M. Warburg, chairman of the Capital Issues Committee, announced today that the sufficient remuneration plan has recently been indorsed by officers of the Central States Banking Association, the Boston Chamber of Commerce and J. L. Replogle, director of steel supply for the War Industries Board. Resolutions of indorsement also are pending before the Investment Bankers' Association.

FORCING THE KISS ASSAULT AND BATTERY

AND IT MAKES NO DIFFERENCE IF THE LADY IS YOUR WIFE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEWARK (N. J.) March 2.—John MacDonald of Montclair stands convicted today of assault and battery for kissing his wife by force.

"No husband has a legal right to kiss his wife by force," Prosecutor Mott told the jury which tried MacDonald. "That act, I assure you, is pure assault and battery in the eyes of the law."

MacDonald, it was alleged, forcibly obtained the kiss after his wife had refused to "make up." The jury convicted him in fifteen minutes. Sentence was deferred.

GERMAN PLOTTER IS NABBED AT SALT LAKE.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

SALT LAKE CITY, March 2.—A plot to release German enemy aliens at the war prison barracks at Fort Douglas and to destroy public buildings in Salt Lake City has been revealed, the police believe, through the arrest of Frank Dimok, alias Petsold, a German subject.

The arrest was effected when Dimok applied for his registration card. In Dimok's possession were found a secret code, a map of Salt Lake City, with mysterious arrows pointing toward Fort Douglas and the State Capitol, numbered diagrams which the prisoner admitted to be of United States fortifications and encampments and many other sketches.

GERMAN WARCRAFTS RUN INTO MINE FIELD; THREE REPORTED SUNK.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

THE HAGUE, Friday, March 1.—Several small German naval vessels ran into mines today, six miles off the Island of Vlieland, North Holland. In the course of attempts of the Germans to save the crews one boat got into the surf and capsized. Five men from this boat were landed on the island.

According to the Handelsblad heavy gun firing was heard in this locality last night.

WARSHIP HITS MINE.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, March 2.—An Amsterdam dispatch to the Daily Mail says that at 1 o'clock Friday morning a German torpedo boat and two German mine sweepers ran into mines off Vlieland Island and were blown up. A German vessel which was in the vicinity lowered a boat to save the crews, but the high seas made it impossible to reach the crews of the wrecked vessels and the boat drifted to the island.

The dispatch says it is learned from Ymuiden that a Dutch fishing boat also struck a mine, all on board being lost.

CHECKERBOARD OF WAR ON THE JAPS' SERVICE.

America Doing Better Than Carping Critics Admit—Edisonian Magic is Out of the Equation.

BY HARRY CARR.

IN THE course of every American war there has come a period of depression when the prospect seemed to be very black.

The Revolutionary War consisted chiefly of blackness and gloomy prospects; there were times in the Civil War when it seemed as though the Lord of Battles had forsaken the North. Even in our funny little war with Spain, there was a day or two when Gen. Shafter was sending in pessimistic dispatches to the War Department.

We are now wallowing in our black days in the Great War.

Figuring it from any point of view, it must be admitted that Germany has advanced to a very strong position.

The collapse of the Russian empire has undoubtedly yielded up to the Germany army a vast quantity of military supplies and a great deal of ammunition. The Russian collapse has also freed thousands of German and Austrian prisoners who will again become available for military service. The increased area of agricultural lands will place Germany definitely beyond the danger of defeat by starvation.

To a certain extent, no doubt, Germany has also been relieved of the military pressure occasioned by her former position of having active lines on both frontiers.

In the first shock of our surprise it is natural to somewhat exaggerate the severity of our predicament.

GRANT'S SAYING.

Gen. Grant said that the most valuable lesson he ever learned was that the enemy was just as much afraid of him as he was of the enemy.

Even the present position of the German army does not consist exclusively of beer and iron crosses. The Germans are now in no danger of defeat by starvation; but in my opinion, they never were in any such danger. There has never been one minute of this war when there was any hope of our beating Germany by any such expedient.

There have been periods during the war when Germany was undeniably short of certain supplies, such as copper and cotton necessary for the manufacture of munitions; but the shortage never has approached the point where it held the slightest hint of German surrender. So after all, the Germans are not so very much better off in that regard than they were before.

The benefit to Germany of being relieved of pressure on the east front is exaggerated by the glooms, who talk war in the hotel lobbies.

It has been contended in this column from the first hint of a Russian collapse, that Germany would never be able to strip her troops away from the east front.

Conditions in Russia are chaotic. This confused condition relates not only to the domestic life of the people but to the wild mix-up occasioned by the birth over night of half a dozen new nations within the former confines of the Russian empire.

It is not to be supposed that the millions of soldiers in the Russian army were all unwilling foes of Germany. A large proportion of them were fighting Germany out of an abiding conviction. These men are undoubtedly thinking the same way still and constitute a constant danger to the German cause in Russia.

In present conditions, every morning may bring forth a fresh revolt; every evening a new danger.

Germany can only maintain her way in Russia by main force and weight of power and numbers; in other words, by bulldozing chaotic Russia into good order and military discipline. All of which requires the constant presence of large forces of German soldiers.

MUST STAY IN RUSSIA.

I don't see how Germany can avoid the necessity of sending several armies into Russia and keeping them there.

The German problem is complicated by a further fact; almost for the first time during the war, she is in pressing need of military activity on two fronts at the same time. Heretofore, it has always been the good luck of the German General Staff to have one or the other front in a quiescent state while she hammered at the opposite frontier.

Just now, it is most essential that the German army should begin a walloping offensive on the west front before the Americans can arrive in force; at the same time to slam into Russia with the greatest energy before Russia can come to life again.

Of course there is also some danger to Germany from the newly-announced activities of Japan.

It must be confessed, however, that we haven't a great deal to hope for from Japan.

I don't see how there can be any mystery about the intentions of Japan. She has made her position clear with the most painful accuracy from the very start.

She is in this war just as deeply as is necessary to benefit herself. This is not said in criticism. When you come to really analyze it, the position of a country that goes to war for any motive other than self-interest is simply monstrous. The nation that goes to war through sympathy for another country or through sentiment is murderous. The only justification for war is self-protection.

All movie dramatics aside, we are in the war to protect ourselves from the most terrible future dangers. Japan is also in it for self-protection.

JAPAN'S PROBLEMS.

Her particular purpose in making the most recent move is this:

On account of her crowded condition and because of certain food problems, it is necessary for Japan to expand. The direction of her expansion is naturally toward the fertile, vast and nearly empty plains of Siberia.

She tried to feel her way in that direction in the Chinese-Japanese War of 1894. She won the war, but the European powers coolly stripped her of all her booty and kept everything that Japan had won from China, for themselves.

Again in the Russian-Japanese War, Nippon reached out. The Powers let her get away with a little triumphant squeak that sounded like a victory. Of course, every one knows that hers was a virtual defeat. She came home worse than empty-handed.

At the opening of the present war, Japan was in a terrible position. Turned back from the only field into which she could expand, facing national bankruptcy, the future looked black and forbidding to the little island empire.

The events of this war suddenly reversed Japanese fortunes. Nippon became outrageously rich to begin with. By a curious kink of fate, she finds all the great powers inviting her with a flourish and a smirk to occupy the areas that were not only forbidden her before but actually snatched from her.

With their hands upon their hearts, the great concert of the powers are now begging their dear, dear friend to occupy the eastern areas of Siberia from which they formerly bade her, with a swift kick, to depart.

It will be the eternal making of Japan to have a Japanese army landed in Siberia. It will be of great benefit to the Allies to have a Japanese army protecting the army supplies in Vladivostok.

From past and bitter experience, Japan has learned that she must be paramount in the Orient or perish. The possession of the Pacific Coast of Siberia will virtually give her absolute mastery in the Far East.

We might as well swallow this dose. The necessities of our occasions will make Japan the great dominant power in the East. But it seems to be a case of Japan or Germany. The Japanese occupation of Siberia will, at least, be an assurance of protection against the German advance to the Pacific through Siberia.

STAR GAZING.

It is a great temptation to go star-gazing and see rising out of this situation a great cause for sympathetic future co-operation between Japan and the United States. Certainly we don't want Germany slipping up to the Siberian coast any worse than does Japan.

But, to come down to earth, it is evident that we can depend upon Japan to head off the Kaiser from the Siberian coast; but that is about the extent of the help we can look for.

When you really come to facts, it is ridiculous to think of a Japanese army sailing across Siberia on some kind of magic carpet or fastened to the tails of kites. Suppose the Mikado were quite willing to hurl millions of troops into the fray against the German front on the Russian border. How are they to be got there?

When our people stop looking to Japan, or to some kind of magic prepared by Mr. Edison, or to other varieties of miracle to win the war they will have made considerable advance.

The United States is quite capable of making it mighty interesting for the Kaiser single-handed. In the long run, the United States can defeat any country in the world. This is a simple matter of man power and resources.

Having recovered from the first period of melodramatics, when we were going to defeat Germany by an Edison invention, we have now arrived at the period where we are filling the air with the din of dismay, that runs as follows:

"Our army is all wrong; the War Department is a collection of crazy people; the Secretary of War is a bum; the wrong machine gun was adopted, etc."

Most of this noise is coming from the same Congressmen who for years have been making speeches about universal peace and refusing to vote appropriations for the army.

DOING WELL.

As a matter of fact, we are doing well with our war making.

Gen. Goethals, the acting quartermaster-general of the army, recently remarked to a distinguished visitor:

"When I was in charge of the Panama Canal, there was a great deal of impatience because nothing seemed to be moving. President Roosevelt cabled me to make the dirt fly. I continued the work of necessary preparations and when the right time came, the dirt flew; but not before. In this war, you will see the dirt begin to fly when the proper time comes."

In the Army and Navy Journal, Maj. Frederick Palmer made so clear and plain a statement of the case that it deserves republication:

"We might have dispatched a hurriedly gathered band of volunteers such as have won glory in little wars against partly trained foes, and it might have gone into the trenches at once with the flag flying. It is easy to go into the trenches, but it is difficult to get out alone if you don't know how to fight. We might have sent other divisions into the trenches to be eaten up in detail without ever getting the foundation for a real army. Or, we might have skimmed our regulars and sent one crack regular division, officered entirely by regulars, who could have gone into the trenches in a few weeks, but that meant sacrificing the only experts we had for training, organizing and drilling our new army. Instead we distributed our experts over the great force we were forming out of a male population that knew nothing of war except what it had read. Our regular officers had to go to school in Europe to train reserve officers, who in turn had to train other officers. Only a soldier can realize the enormity of the task."

WHEAT DESIRED; CORN SHUT OUT.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—A temporary embargo on corn imports was declared tonight by the War Trade Board to increase the movement of wheat from South America needed here for immediate consumption.

Another purpose of the order is to make available wheat for shipment to Switzerland, which, though promised supplies from the United States, are running perilously short because deliveries have not been made.

The embargo, the first placed under President Wilson's proclamation putting imports under license control, will work no hardship, it is declared, on the South American grain exporting nations. All of the countries that sell corn also have large quantities of wheat for sale and tonnage heretofore used for corn shipments will be devoted to moving wheat.

Agriculture.

FARM LABOR NEED DEBATED.

Fixed Plan Urged in Senate to Relieve Shortage.

Army Order is Expected to Help Situation.

Measure is Asked to Replace Drafted Men.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Need for a fixed plan to relieve the labor shortage in agricultural districts caused by the draft was urged today in the Senate debate. The uncertainty, Senator Borah of Idaho declared, was deterring farmers from putting in crops.

"If these boys must be taken," said he, "then there ought to be a labor programme devised to provide for filling their places."

"What is the government to do with the men when they do draft them?" asked Senator McCumber of North Dakota. "I don't see any need of drafting any soldiers between now and next fall. With the present situation we can't put 500,000 soldiers over in France in 1918."

ARMY TO HELP.

Senator Smith of Georgia said he had been advised that the provost-marshal-general would shortly issue an order which would relieve the farm situation.

Challenging Senator McCumber's statement that a half-million men could not be sent to France this year, Senator Kirby of Arkansas, Democrat, of the Military Committee, declared: "We will see 10,000,000 men in camp and 3,000,000 across the seas before the war is finished."

MUCH BIG TALK."

"In my State the Indians would call that 'much big talk,'" retorted Senator McCumber, "but big talk isn't going to win the war. In 1917 we promised the Allies 6,000,000 tons of ships. We didn't give them 2,000,000 tons. We promise them 9,000,000 or 10,000,000 tons in 1918. The present outlook is for not half of that."

"I'm getting tired of this patrioteering business," interjected Senator Williams, Democrat. "The American people haven't suffered any hardships. We haven't put our front toe into the temple—only complain and complain. What's the use of all this patrioteering camouflage? We talk about peace at one end of Pennsylvania avenue and about war at the other. What we want is men and ships."

REGULATING FISH PRICES IN STATE.

GREATER PRODUCTION OBJECT OF OFFICIALS WORKING ON NEW PLAN.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 2.—Steps toward formulating definite working plans for regulation of the fishing industry in California, with a view to increasing production and ultimate stabilization of prices on a basis of cost plus a reasonable profit, were taken today by Ralph P. Merritt, Federal Food Commissioner for this State.

Merritt called a conference with the State Fish and Game Commission, W. C. Crandall of San Diego, recently appointed Federal Fish Commissioner for Southern California, and others, at which the problem was to be discussed.

The fishing industry passed under government control February 15 by the licensing of all deep-sea fishermen. The license system includes all fishing within and without the three-mile limit. Under the law Merritt is empowered to determine what constitutes reasonable profits for fishermen and dealers, but he has no power to set retail prices to the consumer except through voluntary agreements with producers and dealers.

BAN ON PLATINUM HAS LIMITATIONS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—The Council of National Defense announced today that the order commandeering crude or raw platinum now in the hands of importers or refiners, does not interfere with the purchase by consumers of manufactured articles containing platinum.

The explanation was made, the board said, so that the public might clearly understand the purpose of the government's action.

ARE WE SOON TO BECOME A RACE OF BALD-HEADED MEN?

PROF. JOHN H. AUSTIN

Bacteriologist, Hair and Scalp Specialist of Chicago, Who is Now at Hamburger's, Talks Most Interestingly About the Hair.

He says baldness is increasing rapidly among men and points out some of the reasons. Prof. Austin is probably right in saying that about one man in every hundred ever thinks about his hair at all, except to comb it two or three times a day. If it falls out he looks anxiously at the falling hair and then promptly forgets it until the next time he uses a comb.

A man will give the utmost attention to his teeth, because he knows that when trouble arises he will have more trouble and probably lose his teeth if he doesn't go to a dentist promptly. But his hair doesn't ache, it just gradually dies, and when it is nearly gone, and the roots are dead, he anxiously tries a dozen different remedies at once and then resigns himself to baldness.

According to Prof. Austin, there are something like 60 different conditions of the scalp and hair. Some are contagious. Others develop from neglect. Practically all of them are curable in the early stages.

Prof. Austin says the use of dandruff cures, mange cures and hair tonics is like taking medicine without knowing what you are trying to cure. The particular trouble with which your scalp is afflicted must be known before it can be intelligently treated.

Prof. Austin examines the roots of your hair with a powerful microscope. He finds out just what is the trouble with YOUR HAIR, and then he tells you what to do for the trouble.

Prof. Austin has devoted thirty-nine years to study of bacteriology. During the past three years at Hamburger's, he has made thousands of free microscopic examinations of the hair and scalp.

He will make FREE MICROSCOPIC EXAMINATIONS of the hair and scalp all this week in his private office on the second floor of Hamburger's. Hours 10 to 12 a.m. and 2 to 4 p.m.

ANTI-GERMAN MOVE BLOCKED AT ST. LOUIS.

DIRECTORS OF TRADE BODY BAR VOTE BY MEMBERS ON BOYCOTT.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

ST. LOUIS, March 2.—It was learned today at the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, that the directors refused a request by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States to submit to a referendum of its members a resolution warning Germany that an economic combination would be formed against it after the war, unless the danger of excessive armament was removed by making the German government a responsible instrument controlled by the people.

The resolution was sent to the St. Louis organization as well as to all other members of the national organization of chambers of commerce.

Paul V. Bunn, secretary of the chamber, said that there was no extended discussion of the matter, but that the directors took the position that if the purpose was to threaten Germany it would have no effect and that if the purpose was to state some plan of action to be taken after the war, it would be better to wait until the war closed to decide what was best to do.

POSTMASTERS WARNED AGAINST EXPLOSIVES.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Postmasters hereafter will be held to strict accountability for allowing packages containing explosives, inflammable articles, alcohol, etc., to be forwarded from their offices for shipment to the American expeditionary forces in France.

In making this announcement tonight the Postoffice Department called attention to the fact that under the law postmasters may be held jointly responsible with the senders of the unmailable matter should fire or explosion result from the presence of such matter in the mails, whether the fire or explosion occurred in this country or abroad.

Penalty for violation of the law against placing articles in mail which are known to be unmailable is a fine of not more than $5000 or imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both.

DISPEL PEACE IDEA, ARGUES CANADIAN.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 2.—A plea that Americans drive from their minds and discussions all thought of peace and that there be no cessation of war activities by this country, was made today by Lieut. J. S. Dagger of the Canadian expeditionary forces, at the last of a series of community service luncheons given by the Chamber of Commerce.

"The newspapers are full of German peace terms," said Lieut. Dagger. "But let me say to you, 'There ain't no such animal.' This is not the time to pray for peace—this is the time to fight for a peace that shall be everlasting, and to assure that there be no repetition of the present war."

"SOCIALIST PLATFORM IN RUSSIAN TRENCHES."

UPTON SINCLAIR APPEALS TO PARTY TO RALLY TO AID OF THE BOLSHEVIKI.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

PASADENA, March 3. — Upton Sinclair, at his Pasadena home, last night issued, over his signature, the following "brief remarks" to the Socialists of America:

"The Bolshevik government is summoning the workers to the defense of Petrograd against advancing Pan-Germanism. I wish to point out to the American Socialist party that it also is in Petrograd; its St. Louis platform is fighting for life in the trenches before the Russian capital.

"The American party declared for immediate revolt against war; the Russians tried this platform, they gave it as fair a trial as the most ardent pacifist could have asked. They disbanded their army in the face of the foe and the answer of the foe is a fresh campaign of murder and pillage.

"I am not blaming either Russian or American Socialists; I am merely pointing out the facts and urging that the facts be faced.

"What is the response of American Socialist movement to the battle cry of the Bosheviki? Will the movement take any steps to save revolutionary Russia or must this be left entirely to the President, who was not elected as a Socialist and quite possibly does not know that he is a Socialist.

"UPTON SINCLAIR."

Powerful Armies are Closing in on the Bolsheviki in All Provinces Where They Have a Following.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, March 2.—A Petrograd dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company, under date of March 1, says that disquieting news has been received regarding the enemy's advance toward Kiev. A large German-Ukrainian army is concentrated at Zhitomir, which is being evacuated.

The Germans have transferred powerful forces from Volochysk in the direction of Kiev, while the line from Kazatin to Perdichev aims at surrounding the city. Enemy armies are also concentrated at Dubno, Rovno and Lutsk.

Kiev is occupied by detachments of the army under Col. Muravieff, former commander of the Petrograd garrison and now in command of the Bolshevik forces.

"LIBERATION" OF KIEV.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

BERLIN, March 2 (British Admiralty, per Wireless Press.)—The Russian fortress of Kiev on the Dnieper River, in the Ukraine, has been "liberated," the German General Staff announced today.

Gen. Von Linsingen's troops have captured Gomel (120 miles south of Mohilev,) the official statement also declares.

The announcement follows:

"In Esthonia and Livonia our operations are taking their course.

"Gen. Von Linsingen is following up the enemy, who was defeated near Ryechitsa. We captured Gomel.

"Kiev, capital of Ukraine, has been liberated by Ukrainian and Saxon troops.

"Elsewhere there is nothing to report."

MENACE FOOD LINES.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, March 2.—German forces are moving on the town of Bologoie, on the Moscow-Petrograd Railroad, which place is the chief freight center for the feeding of Petrograd, says a dispatch from Petrograd under date of Friday, received by the Exchange Telegraph Company. The Germans probably intend, the message adds, thus to cut off supplies from Petrograd and to compel the capital to capitulate by famine.

Large columns of German troops, the correspondent says, are marching toward Novosokolniki. Enemy forces have occupied the station of Kliastitsa in their movement in the direction of Petrograd.

INVASION REQUESTED.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

AMSTERDAM, March 2.—The decision of the Austro-Hungarian government to send troops into the Ukraine was explained yesterday in the upper house of the Austrian Parliament by Premier Von Seydler as having been taken in response to an urgent request for assistance from the Ukrainian government. The request was made, he said, in consequence of events in Ukraine, which threatened to interfere with the transportation of foodstuffs.

"In the circumstances," he continued, "we could not refuse our help. The necessity has arisen for participation by the monarchy in an action which has not the least connection with any act of war and which possesses no political character whatever. It rather constitutes solely an act of legal administrative assistance rendered at the request of another state and in the interest of that state. Naturally this assistance cannot be given except by the employment of limited military forces."

REDS NEAR HELSINGFORS.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, March 2.—A dispatch from the official Russian news agency says that the town of Tcherkfiet, twenty-five miles from Helsingfors, capital of Finland, has capitulated to the Bolsheviki, 600 White Guards being taken prisoner. Red Guards defeated the White Guards at Kerkala, on the Karis-Helsingfors line. Four hundred and fifty of the White Guards are said to have surrendered.

Dispatches from Stockholm say an agreement has been made under which the Russian and Finnish troops will both evacuate the Aland Islands, leaving the forts and war material in charge of the inhabitants and the Swedish forces recently landed. The Finnish troops, the advices state, have already returned to Finland, while the Russians will proceed to Sweden, remaining there until conditions in the Baltic, now blocked with ice, admit of their returning to Russia.

The islands, it is added, are henceforth to be considered outside the area of hostilities.

HISTORIAN BANCROFT DEAD IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Sketch of the Career of One of the Most Prolific American Writers.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 2.—Hubert Howe Bancroft, famous American historian, died today at Walnut Creek, twenty miles east of this city, aged 86 years.

Although one of the most prolific writers of history which America ever has produced, at the age of forty, Hubert Howe Bancroft had never written a book, nor, by his own statement, made many years later, did he know how to write even the simplest manuscript. From early manhood he had been a bookseller and business man in San Francisco and previous to that, clerk in a bookstore at Buffalo, N. Y. Earlier still, he was a farm hand and tannery boy near Grandville, O., where he was born May 5, 1832. It was in the bookstores that he obtained his education, his attendance at public schools being very limited.

Following his opening of a bookstore at San Francisco in 1856, Bancroft conceived the idea of writing a comprehensive history of California, and to that end began collecting books, manuscripts and newspapers. So absorbed did he become in this search for material that ten or twelve years later he had collected thousands of volumes of books and stacks of manuscripts and newspaper files. Still he had written nothing and could not, for he did not know what was in the books and manuscripts.

Finally, in 1871, the passion to write so consumed Bancroft that he gave the conduct of his business over to others and set himself in earnest to the task. Long since the plan to write only of California had enlarged until it included the Pacific Coast regions of the whole North and South American continents.

Soon despair seized upon Bancroft, for he discovered by tests that the mere work of reading, digesting and notating his material unaided would require at least 400 years. For a time his despondency amounted almost to insanity. Then he considered the expedient of employing assistants and made many experiments, failure generally resulting.. On one occasion he threw into the furnace as worthless twenty-five reams of manuscript, representing the work of six or eight men for months. A noted mediaeval scholar, employed at a high wage, was unable to help him.

Persisting, the would-be historian finally perfected a system of card-indexing which proved successful. Thereafter, he trained and employed hundreds of assistants, the services of some of whom amounted to collaborators. From the vast notes thus accumulated, Bancroft finally approached his real task, he having learned, painfully, in the meantime, something of the art of writing.

More difficulties arose. Bancroft had selected Peru as the subject of his first endeavor and had decided that its history should begin with the Spanish conquest. Suddenly, when the work was half complete, he rejected it, holding to the theory that all history should begin with the beginning of things. Starting anew, he delved into the myths and legends of the mysterious peoples of the American continents, running back into the Middle Ages, marshaling therefrom the facts and theories of his "Native Races of the Pacific States." This work, in five volumes was issued in 1874, it being necessary, at the last, for the author to organize a publishing company to insure its printing.

Bancroft estimated that the work of writing and research expended upon "Native Races" represented the work of one man, toiling every day, Sundays excepted, for fifty years.

Following this great effort, Bancroft, now widely recognized as an authority on history, plunged into other work, continuing incessantly at his desk until he had produced thirty-four volumes, comprising the history of the Pacific Coast States and countries from Alaska to Argentina. His life ambition realized, he devoted himself to occasional writing, producing "Retrospection" after passing his eightieth birthday. In 1883, accompanied by native assistants, he visited Mexico and spent months in searching the ancient archives of that country for historical data. The result was a new history of Mexico, recently issued. His library, housed in a specially constructed building consists of over 60,000 volumes.

During the evening of his life, Bancroft lived quietly at his home in San Francisco.

WILSON INDORSES LUMBERMEN'S ACTS.

GRANTING OF SHORTER DAY HAS BEEN CHARACTERIZED AS "WISE POLICY."

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

PORTLAND (Or.) March 2.—A telegram from President Wilson indorsing the action of the lumbermen of the Northwest in voluntarily granting a basic eight-hour day in the lumber industry was received today by Col. Brice P. Disque, head of the airplane spruce production campaign.

The President's telegram states:

"I was sincerely glad to hear of the action of the lumbermen in instituting the eight-hour day. I think they will find this an act not only of wise policy, but of good sense from every point of view."

A similar message was sent by President Wilson to E. S. Grammer of Seattle, president of the Lumbermen's Protective Association.

MUST PRODUCE FOOD TO WIN GREAT WAR.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 2.—While we prepare men and build ships we must produce food because failure in food supply any time in the crucial six months ahead will lose the war, Ralph P. Merritt, Federal Food Commissioner for California, told a gathering of business men at a "war community service" luncheon of the Chamber of Commerce here today.

Mr. Merritt outlined the purposes of the Federal Food Administration as follows:

To mobilize the food of America so that America's allies could be fed, to feed America's own fighting men and "to feed our own people with sufficient food at reasonable prices in order that the tranquillity of the people may be maintained No Bolshevik doctrine can be preached to a hungry people of this country. The tranquillity of our people must be maintained and will be maintained at all costs."

CHURCH DOESN'T FAVOR PROHIBITION, SAYS LANG.

Primate of England Visits America to Plead the Cause of the Allies.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK BUREAU OF THE TIMES, March 2.—His Grace, the Most Rev. Cosmo Gordan Lang, Lord Archbishop of York and Primate of England, arrived here yesterday for a two months' stay in America. A message of friendship to President Wilson, which he had expected to deliver yesterday, was delayed until his return from a tour as far west as Chicago and St. Louis. He is here on the invitation of the Episcopal church as the guest of its war commission.

"I accepted the invitation only when I had submitted it to our own Foreign Office and to your Ambassador Page," the Archbishop said, at the home of Stuyvesant Fish, No. 25 East Seventy-eighth street.

"I propose to spend six or seven weeks in visiting most of the larger cities of the East and others as far west as St. Louis. I come to plead with America to strengthen and keep strong her great contribution to our common cause.

"We have to strive to finish the work we are in, and when it is done we have to make it as sure as we can, so that no other generation will have to do it over again. For this task nothing is more important than the cordial fellowship of the two nations."

His country, he said, would come out of the war a sobered nation. Referring to the liquor problem, he added:

"I do not think it could be said the Church of England is in favor of prohibition. While the government and the majority of the people are sober, and anxious to be sober, there would be great danger of increasing the strain of our working people by total prohibition. It is better to secure general temperance through our liquor control board than to incite hostility by any attempt at prohibition. But England will never go back to the unrestrained facilities for drink that prevailed before the war."

The Archbishop will preach at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine Sunday morning, and Trinity Church, Broadway and Wall, in the evening.

A patriotic mass meeting in his honor will be held at Carnegie Hall Thursday evening, March 7.

ORGANIZED EFFORT TO MAKE HIM UNPOPULAR IN TORONTO, HE ASSERTS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, March 2.—William Jennings Bryan issued a statement last night explaining the incident at Toronto, Can., Thursday night, when he was jeered while speaking at a prohibition mass meeting and declared that an organized effort to make him unpopular in Toronto had been carried on previous to his arrival. One paper carried an editorial, which, he said, "was an incitement to riot."

"There were editorials in some newspapers declaring that the persons responsible for bringing me to Toronto should be summarily dealt with," he added, "and these may have had much to do with the attempts to keep me from speaking. The papers which attacked me were the only Toronto papers carrying liquor advertisements.

"The incident has been greatly exaggerated in many places and made to appear that Canada rejected me. In fact, not more than 2 per cent. of the audience was antagonistic and these offenders—who were said to be returned soldiers, though they wore no uniforms—would have been put out had I not interfered.

"Nothing was thrown at me. I called to the audience to gather around the stage and made my entire speech."

Mr. Bryan left here tonight for St. Louis and from there will go to Southwestern Arkansas to continue his prohibition speeches.

CUSTODIAN WORKS UNDER NEW RULES.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—President Wilson, by executive order, has prescribed rules and regulations governing detailed operations of the office of the alien property custodian which are expected to facilitate the transaction of business between the public and the custodian's office. The order does not give Mr. Palmer any additional powers, but defines more clearly those vested in him by law and executive order.

AMERICAN ALMOST FALLS INTO VOLCANO.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

HONOLULU (T. H.) Feb. 15 (by mail to Seattle.)—A gust of wind which recently blew the hat of A. W. Shyrer, an American author, from his head while he was taking motion pictures on the rim of the crater of Kilauea volcano, nearly brought him a terrible death in the molten lava pit of the volcano, which has been active for some time.

Shyrer pursued his hat, which lodged on the side of the crater, below where he was standing. As he started to descend, the ledge of rock gave way and he was precipitated into the gaseous pit. He grasped an intervening ledge, fiteen feet down, and pulled himself upon it. He was lacerated badly.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 2.—The Japanese Chamber of Commerce of this city on its own initiative has financed the printing in the Japanese language of 10,000 new home cards of the United States Food Administration which contains the 1918 food conservation rules, according to the Federal Food Commissioner of this State.

These cards, it was announced, have been distributed in the home of every Japanese in the State under the auspices of the local Japanese association.

LIMITATION PLACED ON FUEL ORDERS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.— Consumers of coal in providing this spring and summer for their next winter's fuel requirements will be limited by the Fuel Administration in their purchases strictly to their needs. In making this announcement last night, Fuel Administrator Garfield said all local fuel committees would be instructed to see that there is no hoarding.

The Fuel Administration has advised all consumers to begin as early as April 1, to lay in their next winter's supplies.

FRANCE LEANS TO JAP PLANS.

More Favorable to Intervention than are British.

Allies Near Agreement, is London Report.

Powerful English Element Opposes Idea.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE—DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONDON, March 1.—The suggested intervention of Japan in Siberia has aroused tremendous interest here and the various phases of the problem are eagerly discussed, but the plan on the whole seems to be more favored in France than in Great Britain.

It is now stated here that an agreement among the Allies and Japan is on the point of being reached. Great prominence is given to a Tokio dispatch that Tokio will be the future center of diplomatic dealings in regard to Russia.

That a powerful element here is not altogether favorable to it is made plain by a leadink editorial in the Manchester Guardian, perhaps the most influential newspaper in Europe in diplomatic matters. It says:

OPPOSITION.

"Some of the French newspapers and now Gen. Foch (the noted French strategist) seem to be confident that Japan should and will occupy Vladivostok, Harbin and generally as much of Russian far eastern territory as she can conveniently lay hands on. Such action is represented as a high service to the Allied cause.

"It is suggested that the Germans might pass through Russia, absorb Siberia and place themselves on the Pacific as a menace to Japan. Such military operations would be most fantastic. Even if there were any substance in the hypothesis Japan would not counter such a German move by settling down in Vladivostok and Harbin, which still would leave practically the whole of European and Asiatic Russia exposed.

"If Japan should decide to take Vladivostok, Harbin and Russia's territory in the extreme east, it will not be to please the French or to help the Allies; it will be because Japan has long desired to possess these places and thinks that Russia's adversity is her opportunity.

HIGHER STANDARD.

"In France this may be regarded as just punishment for the repudiation by the Bolsheviki of the national debt and for the separate peace made with Germany, but if Japan does to Russia's eastern frontier even more cynically what Germany is doing to Russia's western frontier, how can the Allies approve without losing the claim to a higher standard of principles than their enemies?

"To encourage or not to repudiate any such action on the part of Japan would be a gross error and would be a flat contradiction of the whole policy of President Wilson. Is it not time that President Wilson took the diplomacy of the war effectively in hand? Speeches will not do it."

In their comments there is a general disposition of the newspapers to defer to President Wilson's views. The Times says:

"No doubt is felt in well-informed circles that the position of the United States will be determined by the logic of the situation and the single-hearted desire which President Wilson always has shown to further the best interests of the Allies."

TO SERVE ALLIES.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, March 2. — While the interest of the press and public continues to be focused on Japan's possible intervention in Siberia, the statements of her diplomatists here that she has not made any specific proposal to that end have induced a tendency to discuss more fully all aspects of the question and in view of the obvious complications of the situation to await further developments, especially the attitude the United States may ultimately adopt.

Meantime the commentators generally continue to acquit Japan of any idea of self-aggrandizement and insist that any action she may take eventually will certainly be in the interest of all the Allies and of Russia. The Times for instance, says it cannot doubt that the Japanese policy will be conceived in the same spirit of good faith and loyalty with which she always has interpreted her obligations as an ally. She has won the confidence of her associates by her long and spotless record of honorable conduct, the Times pointed out, and considers it would be unjust and ungenerous to impute selfish, disloyal ambitions to her without the least evidence to support the suspicion.

Intervention in the dominions of the former Russian empire, the newspaper adds, presents obvious difficulties, but they are difficulties which good will and frank discussion, it thinks, ought readily to overcome.

A JAPANESE STATEMENT.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, Friday, March 1.—Reuter's, Ltd., has issued the following statement from an authoritative Japanese source in London:

"Japan has put forward no suggestions regarding any action that may be necessary as a result of the Russian situation. The plain facts are that a few days ago Japan addressed inquiries to the Allied governments, asking for an expression of their views on the latest developments in Russia. There has been no proposal, military or otherwise, by Japan.

"It is pointed out that Japan did not enter the war under any terms or agreements with the Allies which would suggest that there had ever been any quesiton of aggrandizement in the mind of Japan. There was no such thought when Japan embarked on hostilities, and if she has to extend operations her object will not be aggrandizement.

"The new menace is one directly threatening the Far East and immediately involving Japan's security. Japan's interpretation of her position is that she is responsible for the maintenance of peace and security in the Far East. A German menace already exists in East Siberia and was well known to the Allies even before the latest German advance into Russia."

Spots of Red.

LIKENED UNTO VALLEY FORGE.

Soldiers in France too Well Shod, Says Major.

Foot Paralysis, or Trench Feet, Serious Affliction.

Americans may Gain Through Experience of British.

BY REGINALD W. KAUFFMAN.

[SPECIAL STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.]

THE AMERICAN FRONT, (Delayed in Transmission.)—"The bleeding feet of Washington's soldiers left spots of red on the snow of Valley Forge; the bleeding feet of modern American soldiers have left spots of red on the snow of France. But there is one point of difference. Whereas our Revolutionary troops went barefoot from necessity, these members of our Expeditionary Force suffered because they were too well shod."

The speaker was a United States major. The place was Paris. The time was the birthday of the Kaiser—and of George Randolph Chester. I had just left Chester's "small and early" celebration, and, in common with all the population of the French capital, was waiting for the Kaiser's party to begin. Everybody expected that the evening would be marked by an air raid, and, though everybody went about his affairs as usual, each individual gave some thought to that starlit sky, athwart which defense planes were momentarily scudding.

"I believed," I said, "that one of the troubles with our men over here was a lack of shoes and stockings."

"Not in this case," the major corrected me. "I am speaking of my own battalion, and they were lucky, as events proved, they were too lucky by half."

And then he told me his story.

It is safe to publish it now because the facts with which it deals are over and done with. In their section on "Censorship," Article VIII, Paragraph 424, the United States army "Field Service Regulations" declare:

"Nothing in these regulations is to be construed as limiting the correspondent's freedom of opinion once there ceases to be a necessity for military secrecy, the sole object of the regulations being to keep information from the enemy at a time when it might be of service to him."

The time of the events in the major's story is long past. The troops he spoke of are not now in those trenches. Indeed, there are no American troops anywhere in the trenches of that sector once partially occupied by the major's, and he is sure that what then happened to his men is not now happening to any. Thus, the information that the major conveyed to me cannot by any chance be of use to the enemy; the necessity for "military secrecy" having passed, the facts become "military news."

But a little preface is necessary.

The persons responsible for such things in the care of our men have not been quick to understand the French climate. That is one reason for the number of pneumonia cases in the American ranks.

"This part of the country," a French doctor recently told me, "is full of pneumonia microbes, and has so long been so that the natives are practically immunized; you rarely hear of an adult Frenchman of this region dying of pneumonia; in the French army the fatalities from pneumonia are below 3 per cent. But you Americans aren't immunized: your soldiers come over here, get overheated by a long walk to an inn and then start the walk back to their billets with their coats open. It is fatal."

CASES OF TRENCH FEET.

I repeated this to a British army surgeon.

"We have learned that at last," said he; "and we have learned another thing that you Americans can learn without our price in amputation, if you will only profit by the results of our experience. I am talking of the care of the feet. Nowadays, when British troops are on the march, they are every little while halted and ordered to remove their boots and stockings and rub their feet.

"The same sort of discipline is doing away with that foot paralysis known as trench feet. It comes from long standing in the wet and cold without proper care of the feet and ankles. First the feet are frosted. Then mold attacks them—the regular mold microbe that attacks food—and it is this which has led the French physicians mistakenly to believe that there is a trench-foot microbe. Finally gangrene follows and that's the end. It can all be obviated by decent care, and so the British army has made every case of trench feet a court-martial offense."

"In the first winter of the war," I said, "there were East Indian troops whose puttees—"

But this brings me back to the Kaiser's birthday, and to my American major and his story of the bloody footprints of American soldiers in the snow of France.

The major spoke with an accent that carried my thoughts far away from Paris; he spoke with an accent that carried me to his New Haven home. But though his manner was the manner of Connecticut, his matter was all of France.

"It was our first experience under fire that we were moving up to meet," he said. "We'd been billeted in a village for some time, and a heavy snow had fallen, when marching orders came. We all knew what they meant; they meant fighting at last. The entire line ahead of us—we were at the tail end of that line—was to go into the trenches.

GLAD FOR NEWS.

"We were glad to get the news. You never saw men more happily excited. The fellows were like a lot of schoolboys that are suddenly told the next day will be an unexpected holiday. They just itched to fight. Every last one of them was in perfect condition.

"A part of the marching order was to the effect that the troops should be kept as warm and dry as possible. Especial care was to be taken of the feet; the standing regulations on that point were emphasized, and we were told that the men must be ordered to wear, wherever possible, boots one size larger than their ordinary service boots, and three pair of woolen stockings.

"Now, I know all about the stories concerning poor boots and the sock famine. They are mostly true and mostly the result of inefficiency and poor organization among the civilian bureaus at home that are responsible for the making and shipping of equipment. But, whatever was the condition of the rest of the division, my battalion happened—thanks largely to the Red Cross—to be in a position to obey that order. They had large boots and plenty of socks, so I passed along the command to my superiors, and the command was obeyed.

"Being, as I said, at the end of the line of advance, we had further to go to get to the rendezvous than the other units, and our way lay through unbroken roads white with snow. So we'd send one company ahead to shovel a clear passage, working as swiftly and as hard as it could. Then we'd rush up and relieve it by another company turned snow tossers, and so on. We got to the rendezvous, in spite of these difficulties, at the time ordered; and just because we got there at the time ordered, we got into trouble.

"For the time set for arrival turned out to be a long while before the time of real departure. Whose the fault was, I don't undertake to say, but the fact remains that my men had to get there dripping with sweat if they were to get there at the ordered hour; and that, once at the rendezvous, they had to stand for from twenty minutes to half an hour in the snow.

"They shifted from foot to foot. They tried to stamp their feet. Then they began to look at one another, aghast.

"Because, obeying orders, they had to put on three pair of thick woolen socks apiece, they had checked the circulation. They sat down and began to take off their boots. When they took off their stockings, many of the men peeled off the skin along with the undermost pair of socks; and many of them could not even take off their boots, for the boots were frozen fast. The snow grew red.

"When the order to march came at last, every man in my battalion proceeded, with feet that were at last frosted, into the trenches, where, of course, no further care could be taken. The feet of sixty-one were frozen outright."

The major had finished his story.

"Major," I said, "in the winter of 1914-15 there was a certain hospital near the British front. To it were brought East Indian troops who had suffered, as your man have suffered, because the British forgot to change an old semitropical order about the tightness of the Indian troops' puttees. In that hospital you could walk between rows and rows of beds, on each of which lay an Indian, both of whose feet had been amputated. From that experience, the British learned their lesson about the care of feet. If I, a mere newspaper man, knew of these facts, how is it that they weren't—"

The major interrupted. He hauled from a sheaf a copy of the "United States Army Regulations," and pointed to Article 1, Section 5:

"Deliberations or discussions among military men conveying praise or censure, or any mark of approbation, toward others in the military service . . . are prohibited."

"I guess that air raid's not coming off tonight," said the major.

"I guess not," I answered. "Good night."

STATE COURTS STILL HAVE JURISDICTION.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

LOUISVILLE (Ky.) March 2.—Government control of railroads does not make it obligatory to try damage suits against transportation systems in Federal court, according to a ruling in United States District Court here today by Judge Walter Evans, who held that State tribunals have jurisdiction. The ruling was said to be a precedent.

TO BAR ARMY OFFICERS FROM CIVIL EMPLOYMENT.

Name of Maj.-Gen. Cruse is Linked with House Raided by Federal Agents.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Absolute prohibition against any retired army or navy officer accepting civil employment which might connect him in any way with government contracts, may result from bringing the name of Maj.-Gen. Thomas Cruse, formerly disbursing officer of the Quartermaster Corps, into the investigation of the affairs of Henry H. Lippert, a Chicago manufacturer's agent, whose offices were raided yesterday by government agents.

Gen. Cruse called at the War Department today to see Assistant Secretary Crowell, but the purpose of his visit was not disclosed.

So far as could be learned here, any connection Gen. Cruse may have had with Lippert was subsequent to his retiring from the army.

Gen. Cruse had no connection with the awarding of army contracts for a long time prior to his retirement. As distributing officer his function was only to pay bills.

The incident served to renew discussion among army officers of the ethics of retired officers taking outside employment that would bring their friendship with former service associates to bear on contract awards.

LIPPERTS ARRESTED.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

CHICAGO, March 2.—Henry H. Lippert and his son, Ralph H. Lippert, arrested last night on charges of conspiring to defraud the government, and with whose case has been linked the name of Brig.-Gen. Thomas Cruse, U.S.A., were admitted to bail in bonds of $10,000 each today. Arraignment was set for March 12, before United States Commissioner Lewis F. Mason, and while awaiting arrival of sureties, the elder Lippert discussed the charges.

"The wrong construction has been placed on my relations with Gen. Cruse and the Quartermaster's Department," he said. "I have known Gen. Cruse fourteen years and have always found him an upright gentleman."

The Lipperts were arrested last night following an earlier raid on their offices under a Federal search and seizure warrant. The Lipperts have been agents here for firms making cloth and blankets used by the army.

In his statement before Commissioner Mason asking for the warrant it was charged by Capt. Melvin B. Ericson that Gen. Cruse had admitted to him in Washington that in January he had received $1500 from the elder Lippert and that an agreement had been entered into by which Lippert was to pay him $300 a month.

ARMY OFFICERS MENTIONED.

A large number of papers were taken possession of by the United States marshals who conducted the raid. Federal officials said in the cursory examination of some of the papers a number of names of officers in the army, as well as men prominent in public and business life, were mentioned. It was added that the mention of these names in letters and documents did not necessarily connect the individuals with any illegal deals with the Lipperts or Gen. Cruse.

No estimate was given of the amount involved in the charges that the government has been defrauded.

Among the papers sought by the Federal authorities and specified in the warrants are:

Letter dated September 1, 1916, to Senator James Hamilton Lewis, Washington, regarding promotion of Langborne Allen and appointment of J. W. Sallady as chief inspector Chicago quartermaster's department.

Notations, records, letters or telegrams, regarding Julius Rosenwald, particularly contents in a private "lock box," in room No. 403 Security Building (one of the Lippert suite.)

Numerous letters, dates given, to and from E. L. Erickson, United States arsenal, St. Louis, Mo., and one in regard to the visit of Gen. Cruse to the arsenal.

Check for $4700, mentioned in telegram from "Ralph to Henry," November 1, 1917, Henry then being at the New Willard Hotel, Washington. Also letter or transmittal and all other papers and memoranda regarding the check.

Memoranda of Capt. Goetz, initialed "R. B. P." Lieut.-Col., quartermaster's depot, Jeffersonville, Ind.

Letter dated January 3, 1918, from Thomas Cruse to H. H. Lipport, Chicago, and schedule on 10,000 white blankets referred to in letter.

CHARGES MADE.

After mentioning the long series of letters and documents, probably close to 2000 in all, the Federal search warrant charges that certain felonies have been committed against the United States, "that is to say the felony group, Henry H. Lippert and Ralph D. Lippert of aiding and, abetting Thomas Cruse, brigadier-general, United States Army, to commit the offense of receiving and agreeing to receive compensation for services rendered, and to be rendered, by him, in relation to a contract in which the United States was a party."

"BIBLE STUDENT'S" LECTURE STOPPED.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

GLOBE (Ariz.) March 2.—The Globe school board tonight abruptly stopped a lecture advertised to be given here by E. D. Sexton, representing the International Bible Students' Association, whose Los Angeles quarters were raided Friday night by Federal officers, by refusing Mr. Sexton the use of the high school auditorium. It was explained that Mr. Sexton had engaged the auditorium for four nights for the purpose of giving a motion-picture exhibition, but had intended to devote the last night to a pacifist lecture, to which the school board objected.

JUDGE SAYS BAKER SHOULD RUN ROADS.

STATUTE GIVES WAR DEPARTMENT RIGHT OF OPERATION, FEDERAL JURIST ASSERTS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

LOUISVILLE (Ky.) March 2.—Federal Judge Walter Evans, in the course of an opinion rendered here today denying Federal courts exclusive jurisdiction in damage suits against transportation companies solely because they are under government control, indicated that he had failed to find any statute authorizing Director-General McAdoo to take control of the railroads of the country.

The text of the opinion, which became available here tonight, in this connection says:

"Under no established rule of interpretation can it be doubted that Congress authorized, in time of war, the War Department, and no other, to take over the railroads. If we assume (which is inconceivable) that the Secretary of War declined for that department, we can find no statute authorizing the control of the railroads under the Treasury Department nor by a director-general of railroads."

Judge Evans cited the law empowering the government to take over the railroads, pointed out that Congress specified it should be done through the War Department, of which Newton D. Baker is the head, and asserted that W. G. McAdoo, who was and is Secretary of the Treasury, has been appointed by President Wilson as director-general, an office which, the court says, the law does not recognize. After remarking it is inconceivable that the War Department was asked and refused to take over the railroads, Judge Evans declares, if the letter of the law were applied, it would be a question whether Baker and not McAdoo would not be compelled to operate the railroads "in person."

COST OF GOVERNMENT IS INCREASING FASTER THAN THE POPULATION.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN FRANCISCO BUREAU OF THE TIMES, March 2.—In the five years ended June 30, 1916, the cost of city, county and State government in California increased 84 per cent., the population increased 27 per cent. and the assessment rolls of the counties increased 37 per cent., State Controller John S. Chambers said last night, in an address on taxation before the American Institute of Banking.

"It is a concrete illustration," he said, "of public expenditures increasing far more rapidly than population or wealth. The new functions have added materially to the cost of our State government and to some extent to the cost of our county and city governments. In California we know new functions as 'commissions.' Some of these commissions have brought back far more than they cost and others have proved broken reeds."

Chambers advocated education of the people as to governmental financing, comprehensive budget systems, uniform accounting and expenditure limit laws and a central bond board to pass on bond issues. He spoke of the encroachment of the Federal government on State sources of revenue.

"Washington has been steadily surmounting its own fiscal troubles by invading the States," he said, "and thus transferring to the latter the problem. General property taxes were found unsatisfactory; the States reached out and developed taxation of corporations, incomes and inner finances; the government taxed these State-developed sources of revenue and constantly increased its rates.

"Unless something is done the burdens on these sources will become soon so heavy that the States, being the weaker, will have to recede and abandon them to the Federal government. The States cannot afford to do that."

The Controller said he did not believe the government would assume ownership of railroads without making arrangements with the States. Government ownership, he said, would cost California $5,000,000 in taxes every year.

"If the American people learn thrift," Chambers said, "it will be worth more than the financial cost of the war. But thrift should not be confined to individuals—the various forms of government must practice it.

"Bills before the Legislature at its last session called for appropriations of $[illegible]4,740,400 in excess of budget recommendations. The people would have been in a bad condition had those bills all been passed. The budget amendment should be added to the constitution at the next election.

JAPAN INTERVENTION OPPOSED BY RUSSIAN.

AUTHOR SEES COUNTRY AS BATTLEGROUND OF OTHERS FOR YEARS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONDON, March 2.—Michael Farbman, a well-known Russian journalist, writing to the Daily News in a reference to the proposed landing of the Japanese troops in Siberia, says:

"Whatever the intentions of Japan and her French and British advisers may be, her troops will be received in Siberia as enemies, not as friends.

"While Germany alone commits these crimes, we are convinced that the invasion of Russia in time will cause a rupture between Austria and Germany and between German democracy and the Pan-Germans, but as soon as Japan, with the benediction of the Allies, begins to invade Siberia from the other side Germany will be given a kind of justification for her rapacity.

"Germany will then continue the invasion of Russia under the pretext of combatting 'the yellow danger,' and Russia will for many years become the arena of a struggle between Germany, China and Japan."

LIGHTHOUSE PROJECT AGAIN IN JEOPARDY.

PALOS VERDES SYNDICATE TRIES HOLD-UP GAME, IS ALLEGED.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON BUREAU OF THE TIMES, March 2.—Los Angeles will get no lighthouse between San Pedro and Redondo now, and not at all, unless some alleged profiteers change their mind about holding up the United States government. Today Secretary Redfield telegraphed the United States District Attorney in Los Angeles to abandon condemnation proceedings of the site for the new lighthouse. Unless the property owners change their minds, all the work of the Harbor Commission, the Chamber of Commerce and the shipping men of the entire Coast will go for naught and the appropriation of $80,000 for the site and the lighthouse will, at once revert to the United States treasury.

The Department of Commerce is advising the California Senators and Congressman Osborne that Frank A. Vanderlip and the Palos Verdes Syndicate is trying to hold up the United States for $832,000 for twelve and a half acres needed for the lighthouse. The entire ranch, the Secretary of Commerce claims, consisting of 16,000 acres, was purchased for $1,800,000, and now the owners demand one-third of the total sum for twelve and a half acres and have all of the ranch left.

The site desired is worthless as far as agricultural or other uses are concerned. The owners demand $30,000 for the land itself, $2500 for the right of way, and $600,000 for the damages to the adjoining property. All the plans of the government protect the property in every way and all the noise of the fog horn is diverted to sea. The structures are to be of cement and no possible loss can be sustained by the property on account of the proposed improvement.

Officials say that apparently the dream of the Palos Verdes Syndicate for a million-dollar colony of nonresident exclusives from New York and other points in the East is dead and the owners are trying to recoup their losses by taking it out of the United States treasury. While the claims of the owners of the property are absurd the department does not propose to take any chances and will abandon the project unless the harbor officials of Los Angeles and the public-spirited citizens secure the site at a reasonable figure. The former owners of the property agreed in writing to sell twenty acres, including the present site, to the government for $500 an acre and this the government was willing to accept and will now accept as fair.

Three wrecks have occurred at Point Vicente in recent years because the land there juts out so far into the Pacific that south-bound vessels cannot see the Point Fermin light. For years the shipping men have demanded another light, at this point, and after years of agitation the government finally appropriated money for the purpose, but unless prompt action is now taken, by Los Angeles, the money will be lost and if ever a lighthouse is built it will be the result of doing the work all over again.

COLD STORAGE FOOD PRODUCTS.

New Rules Limit Profits in Poultry and Eggs.

No Embargo Placed on Trading in Fresh Hen Fruit.

Administration Fixes Rates Governing in Future.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Rules limiting the trade profits in and regulating the distribution of frozen poultry and cold storage eggs were issued last night by the Food Administration. They become effective today and, it was announced, have the general approval of the trades. The rules, said a Food Administration statement, are designed to reduce the number of transactions to the economic minimum and are expected to stabilize the industries, place transactions on a just merchandising basis, allow legitimate competition, but restrict opportunities for speculation, aid in securing prompt, regular and efficient distribution, eliminate unnecessary trading and otherwise discourage practices that have been reflected in abnormally high prices to consumers.

"The limits of maximum price advances allowed," the statement continued, "have been placed at points that will maintain all necessary distributing agencies and warrant payment to producers of satisfactory prices. The rules do not apply to any trading in poultry not at some time in a cold storage warehouse or to trading in fresh eggs. They do not, in themselves, place any restrictions upon the prices to be paid for poultry or eggs intended for storage. They merely limit the profits that can be made on any transaction after the purchase until the poultry or eggs are in the retailers' hands.

"The original stores of poultry in a cold storage warehouse may be allowed an advance over cost not to exceed 6 per cent.; a commission merchant selling frozen poultry for an original storer may receive a commission not exceeding 5 per cent. on the cost of the poultry, and a wholesaler, a jobber, a supplier of hotels and institutions may receive an advance over cost to each dealer of 5 per cent., 10 per cent. or 15 per cent., respectively.

"The storer of eggs in a cold storage warehouse may be allowed an advance of 6 per cent. over cost; a commission merchant selling for an original storer may receive a commission not exceeding 4 per cent.; a wholesaler may receive an advance of 4 per cent. and a jobber selling in original packages may receive an advance of 5 per cent. In selling candled storage eggs the actual net candling loss is considered part of the cost and jobbers, suppliers of hotels and institutions and retailers operating under license are allowed advances of 10 per cent., 12 per cent. and 15 per cent., respectively, over cost.

"It is expected by the Food Administration that most of the trading in frozen poultry will be at smaller margins of profit than those given. These maximums are intended to cover the most expensive methods of distribution in the several classes. Reduction in the number of distributive steps have been kept in mind in formulating these rules."

G.O.P. LEADER BUSY IN EAST.

Confers with Former Head of Party at Albany.

Plans Visit to Maine at Convention Date.

Assured of Support by New York Governor.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, March 2.—William Barnes of Albany, former chairman of the Republican State Committee and recognized as leader of the Old Guard, was one of the prominent politicians who conferred here today with Will H. Mays, Republican national chairman. Others who saw Mr. Hays were Gov. Whitman, Gov Earl Milliken of Maine, and William L. Ward, Republican leader of Westchester county.

"Mr. Barnes simply called to pay his respects," said Mr. Hays, when asked about this meeting with the former State chairman.

"Gov. Milliken of Maine called upon me to explain the political situation in his State and urge me to attend the Maine convention, which is to be held on March 28. In view of the gravity of the situation in Maine I told the Governor I would make every effort to attend the convention which is to be held in Portland. I have heard that Col. Roosevelt, if his health permits, also will be present."

Gov. Whitman was one of the last to see the national chairman.

"I have assured Mr. Hays," said the Governor after the conference. "that he may call upon me at any time he feels I may be of service to him."

Mr. Hays left for Indianapolis tonight.

WHAT THE JAPANESE WANT IN SIBERIA.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

LONDON, March 2.—A diplomatic correspondent, presumably Japanese, discussing in the Chronicle the objects Japan would have in taking action in Siberia, says that Manchuria would be the base of the Japanese operations. Vladivostok, he points out, is regarded as sufficiently protected by the Japanese fleet.

A compact force, this writer considers, would probably be dispatched to control the trans-Siberian railroad. A point at least as far in the interior as Irkutsk, he says, would be the objective, it may be assumed, as local action in Russian Manchuria is deemed inadequate.

"Owing to the sinking of the steamer Tuscania with American troops aboard, urgent steps should be taken to have all enemy aliens, naturalized or not, removed at once from every coast town and seaport, and prohibited from approaching within ten miles of the coast."

The resolution asks all important civic bodies in Belfast to take similar action and to forward their resolutions to the Premier.

NONPARTISAN CHARGE HELD INSUFFICIENT.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

ST. PAUL (Minn.) March 2.—Charges of non-feasance and malfeasance on the part of certain county officials preferred by the representatives of the Nonpartisan League, whose meetings were broken up by the officials, do not contain allegations sufficient to warrant trials, according to an opinion written by Atty.-Gen. Smith, given to Gov. Burnquist today. In the case of O. C. Lee, Sheriff of Jackson county, the charges, according to the opinion, may be adequate to demand an investigation.

The Terror of Grip is the After Effects

Grip leaves its victims weak with localized troubles. Many of them drag along for months after an attack with aching backs, coughs and colds and impaired digestion.

Grip is a catarrhal disease and it leaves the system full of that dread malady. Drive out the catarrh and you overcome the grip.

There is one treatment that seldom fails to bring relief, one remedy that time has tested and thousands have proved.

Rebuild Your Lost Strength with PERUNA—a good tonic

Because PERUNA is a good tonic and because it has special reference to catarrhal conditions its use in the weakness following Grip has proven very beneficial. It clears up the system of all the poisonous matter left after the attack, gives tone and strength to the digestive organs and overcomes the congestion and inflammation. What it has done for thousands is well told in the letter below.

LOOK AT THIS LETTER
Mrs. Frank Stroebe, R. F. D. 1, Appleton, Wis., says:

"I began using Peruna a few months ago when my health and strength were all gone, and I was nothing but a nervous wreck. Could not sleep, eat or rest properly, and felt no desire to live.

"Three bottles of Peruna made me look at life in a different light, as I began to regain my lost strength. While my recovery took nearly four months, at the end of that time I was better than I ever was before. I had a splendid color and never weighed more in my life.

"I certainly think Peruna is without a rival as a tonic and strength builder, and it has my endorsement."

DEFENDS ACTS OF ALLIANCE.

German-American Society Disloyalty Denied.

Not Responsible for Foolish Leaders, Says Witness.

Senate's Right to Oppose Charter Protested.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Members of State organizations affiliated with the National German-American Alliance defended the alliance against charges of disloyalty today before a Senate subcommittee and maintained the right of State alliances to political activity. The committee is holding a hearing on a bill by Senator King of Utah to revoke the charter of the alliance and close the affairs of its State organizations.

Theodore Sutro of New York, former president of the New York State Alliance, disclaimed responsibility of the organization for utterances of individual members and repudiated statements of Dr. C. J. Hexamer of Philadelphia, former president.

"Presidents of societies are often very foolish," Mr. Sutro declared, when asked by Senator King if he approved an utterance attributed to Dr. Hexamer, in a speech in Milwaukee in 1915, that the alliance was of such political power that it could dominate communities where it was well organized.

REPUDIATES ARTICLES.

Pro-German articles appearing in the official bulletin of the alliance were repudiated by Sutro, who asserted the alliance should not be held to account for what appeared in the publication.

"We are at war against German war, and not against German peace, and German achievements," Mr. Sutro said. He added that he did not subscribe to the German view of large standing armies and did not believe in the idea of non-assimilation of German immigrants. However, he thought it improper for Americans to ask persons of German birth to deny their ancestry.

It is proper for the organization to declare itself in political affairs, he asserted, and he expressed the belief that it was not improper for the organization to oppose and aid in defeating prohibition in the several States.

He also did not believe it improper for the organization in local communities to oppose candidates for school boards who did not favor teaching German, because he believed it advantageous to students to have knowledge of two languages.

Although unable to recall positively, Mr. Sutro said he did not think the national organization took any stand against the shipment of war munitions to Europe or boycotted any firm which bought bonds from the Allies prior to America's entrance into the war.

Col. Paul Meerscheidt of San Antonio, Tex., vice-president of the Texas State Alliance, denied any unpatriotic motives on the part of his organization, but said Germans in Texas were advised to stand together for political purposes in local elections. This was regarded necessary, he said, for the maintenance of German interests.

It was brought out in Mr. Meerscheidt's examination that about three or four weeks before the United States entered the war he received a telegram from Dr. Hexamer urging him to call meetings of the alliance in San Antonio and other Texas cities to take action against a declaration of war. Hexamer also urged, he said, that telegrams be sent to Representatives and Senators asking that before a declaration of war was made the question be submitted to a referendum. No action was taken on either of the suggestions, he said.

SUPPORTED HUGHES.

Preceding the election of 1916, Mr. Meerscheidt said, he received a message from Dr. Hexamer asking him to urge German voters to support Charles E. Hughes for President.

Other opponents of the alliance will be heard by hte committee Monday.

Formal protest against the Senate committee hearing on the bill to revoke the charter of the German-American Alliance was filed today by Karl A. M. Scholtz of Baltimore, attorney for the alliance. He questioned the right of Senator King of Utah, author of the bill, to sit on the committee.

The committee overruled the protest and then a further protest was filed by Sutro, who contended Congress has no jurisdiction to revoke the charter. The procedure should be brought in the courts, he argued.

The committee went on with the hearing and secured a blanket denial of the charges of disloyalty from President S. V. von Bosse of the alliance.

PEEL OFF CALLUSES
WITH THE FINGERS

"Hard skin" or callus spots on the sides or the bottom of the feet peel right off without pain or soreness, after you apply a little Freezone, says a Cincinnati authority. This ether drug loosens the dead, callused skin so it peels off with the fingers.

A quarter ounce of Freezone costs but a few cents at any pharmacy, but is sufficient to remove every corn or callus from one's feet. This is the only way to free the feet from corns and calluses without soreness, danger or infection.

After the corn or callus is lifted away the skin beneath is pink and healthy, and not sore, tender or even irritated.

LIEUT. U. S. GRANT IV BECOMES BENEDICT.

DESCENDANT OF FAMOUS GENERAL FIGURES IN ROMANTIC MARRIAGE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SPARTANBURG (S. C.) March 2.—Lieut. U. S. Grant, IV, left camp yesterday afternoon for Washington to report to the Chief of Ordnance there, and just before leaving, gave his brother officers a surprise by announcing that he was married in Spartanburg on October 4 to Miss Matilda Bartikofsky of New York City.

The marriage license was issued by Probate Judge J. J. Burnett, who performed the ceremony. The marriage license gave the age of Lieut. Grant as 24 and that of Miss Bartikofsky as 22. Lieut. Grant's address is given as No. 601 West One hundred thirty-seventh street, and that of the bride as No. 324 West Eighty-third street.

"She is as pretty a girl as I ever saw," said Judge Burnett today. Ordinarily I do not think much of secret marriages, but Lieut. Grant is such a manly fellow and the girl so pretty, and they were so much in love with each other, that I consented to perform their marriage and keep it a secret. It was a pretty romance, and I am sure they will be very happy."

Lieut. Grant is a graduate of Harvard, and a descendant of the famous Union general, whose name he bears. He came to Camp Wadsworth as a private in the ammunition train, in which he had served until recently, when he was awarded a second lieutenant's commission as a result of a special examination. He has been popular in camp.

Lieut. Grant and Miss Bartikofsky, it became known today, took Judge Burnett into their confidence, told him they wanted to keep the marriage a secret for a while and he consented to aid them. The marriage certificate was not placed on record until late yesterday afternoon.

The marriage was the culmination of a pretty romance. Miss Bartikofsky arrived at Spartanburg early in the morning of October 4. Lieut. Grant, then a private, met her at the station and during the day they visited the office of Judge Burnett, who issued them the license required under South Carolina laws and then performed the ceremony in his little private office, in the County Courthouse.

Chauffeurs or Auto-truck Drivers and Cooks are Wanted.

A telegram was received yesterday by the various chairmen of local exemption boards from Adjt.-Gen. Borree at Sacramento, transmitting an order from the War Department at Washington, calling upon California to help fill Gen. Pershing's need for special men in France.

Four hundred chauffeurs or auto truck drivers are required for the aviation section of the Signal Gorps, to be sent to Kelly Field, San Antonio, Tex. Another call is for 170 cooks for the same Signal Corps section. Only white men physically qualified and of general military availability will be accepted.

Half an hour after he received the wire, Chairman S. J. Adkins of district board No. 16 had rounded up sixteen cooks.

WEATHER FOR A WEEK.

REDUCED PASSENGER SERVICE IS PLANNED.

ELIMINATION OF COMPETING TRAINS IN WEST IS ANNOUNCED.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Passenger train service in the West will be reduced one-third or more by a rearrangement of schedules to be announced shortly by Director-General McAdoo.

Scores of trains on competing lines leaving and arriving at terminals about the same time will be eliminated. Unnecessary trains on many western lines are to be taken off and the locomotives and crews used for essential freight service. There is no thought, however, of making a few western lines the principal passenger carriers as contemplated in the East. Officials also stated that the reduction in schedules will not result in any serious inconvenience to passengers.

The curtailment which has been under consideration for several weeks by Gerrit Fort, passenger traffic director for the Railroad Administration, will be effective from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Coast. In much of this territory traffic is comparatively light and by a reduction of the number of trains, Railroad Administration officials believe they can save many millions of dollars and still provide ample facilities for all through travel to the Coast.

ANTICIPATED IN WEST.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 2.—Further reduction of the train service in the West announced today by Director-General McAdoo probably will take the form of lengthening present schedules, it was said at the office here of the Southern Pacific company. The proposed curtailment of passenger service has been anticipated, it was said, and no serious disruption of accommodations was expected. Southern Pacific officials had no detailed information concerning the proposed curtailment.

CATARRH

New and Curious Remedial Discovery That Never Fails to Give Immediate Results

Here is a safe and easy method for getting at catarrh that invariably surprises chronic sufferers because of the immediate and pleasing effects it produces. There is no waiting for results. Just to cite an instance, take the experience of Mr. H. Elser, Lexington, Neb., who writes: "Dear Sam Katz: I received your catarrh treatment, and in two days my catarrh was gone. I am now cured."

The Sam Katz method which this gentleman and thousands of others have used, is different from any thing you have ever known of. There is nothing to smoke, spray or inject; no salves, creams, vibration or massage. Everything about it is natural and healthful.

The exact remedial combination of this method is a secret known only to myself and my associates, although I will say this much: It is based on the modern scientific discovery that the disease germs causing catarrh must be destroyed and dislodged from the infected tissue in order to effect a radical and permanent cure.

Banish Your Catarrh Restore Your Health and Organic Vitality

Catarrh, as you know, gradually works downward from the nose, throat and head, through the entire system, doing damage everywhere. Headaches, dizziness, deafness, head noises, confused thoughts, impairment of the memory, weakened vision, sore eyes, boils, nervousness, general languor, rheumatism, lame back, neuralgia, stomach, liver, kidney, bladder disorders, weaknesses of the vital organs and many other maladies and ills may, any or all, be due to the ravages of the disease we call catarrh. Once cleanse your system of the deadly catarrh germ, a task that my method is purposed to accomplish, and your entire organism responds, giving you a new sense of vital vigor and renewed health. As Nancy A. Davis of Waynesboro, Miss., writes me: "Since taking the Sam Katz method I feel like a new woman. I think your catarrh treatment is worth its weight in gold."

Your body affected with catarrh is like this jar of moulded fruit. You can't get rid of the scum by scraping it off. The cause must be removed.

FULL BOX SENT ON TRIAL.

Don't send any money, not even a stamp, but simply your name and address on a postal or in a letter, and I will arrange to forward to you, postpaid, a trial box of the Sam Katz Catarrh Materials, the same that I have sent to tens of thousands all over the world. There will be enough of the Materials for a fifteen days' test, after which you may go on with the full Course if you so decide.

The Sam Katz Catarrh Materials are always put out in these trial packages, no matter how far from Chicago the sufferer may live, including Canada and foreign lands. So do not hesitate or delay. Write at once. I want you to try this mysterious remedy without risking a penny of your money. I will gladly take all the chances. Please address.

SPRECKELS' DAUGHTER FILES DIVORCE SUIT.

MRS. HOLBROOK ACCUSES HUSBAND OF THREATENING TO KILL HER.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SAN FRANCISCO BUREAU OF THE TIMES, March 2.—Mrs. Lillie S. Holbrook, daughter of John D. Spreckels, has filed suit for divorce against Henry M. Holbrook, until last January 15 president of Holbrook, Merrill and Stetson, Inc., charging him with threatening to kill her and abusing and humiliating her while he was under the influence of liquor.

Judge E. P. Morgan has issued an order enjoining the sale of any of Holbrook's property, said to be valued at $700,000, until the divorce case is decided.

Through her attorney, Mrs. Holbrook seeks the custody of her 6-year-old daughter, Harriett; $2000 a month alimony; $7500 for attorney's fees and a share in the community property.

The Holbrooks were married is San Francisco, February 25, 1905, and their troubles started, according to Mrs. Holbrook's complaint, when she remonstrated with her husband, and he told her he had only one life and intended to live it as he pleased.

Mrs. Holbrook bases her plea for divorce on the following charges:

Under the influence of liquor her husband was boisterous and disrespectful in the presence of their acquaintances, humiliating and abusing her.

Three times during the month of November, 1916, Holbrook locked her in her bedroom against her wishes, making her very nervous and ill.

In January 1914, Holbrook went to their home in Pacific avenue, and, pointing a large revolver at her, threatened to kill his wife. Later he retired to his room, saying he would kill himself.

Holbrook refused to permit Mrs. Holbrook to entertain her friends, "ladies of culture and refinement," because his sister did not like them.

For the last threee years he has been morose and sulky, and for the last two years he has "boasted and bragged about different women and spoken of women he would like to live with, thereby insulting the plaintiff."

Although Holbrook has an income from property valued at $700,000 or more and receives a salary of at least $500 a month, he has refused to provide for his child.

GOETHALS DENIES BAD-BREAD STORY.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—In a memorandum prepared for Secretary Baker, Maj.-Gen. Goethals, Acting Quartermaster-General, today denied a complaint by Mayor Mosher of Walnut, Iowa, that the bread fed to soldiers lacks nutrition.

"It is not true that soldiers are being forced to use a bread from a flour that the government declared to be 'bled white' by the millers, as stated by Mr. Mosher," Gen. Goethals says. "The greatest care is taken by the Quartermaster's Department ot see that the bread issued to the soldiers is nutritious, wholesome and tasty in every respect."

WRECKED PRIZE SHIP CARRIED AMERICANS.

[BY ATLANTIC CABLE AND A. P.]

COPENHAGEN, March 2.—John Cameron, captain of the American schooner Beluga; his wife, Mary, and their 4-year-old daughter, Juanita, of San Francisco, were the only American prisoners on board the Spanish steamship Igotz Mendi, which went ashore on the northern extremity of Jutland, Denmark, while attempting to reach a German port. Capt. Cameron says that the Germans fed and treated all of the prisoners well until a Japanese succeeded in escaping, after which all were kept below for twenty-eight days.

A German official statement of last February 25 stated that the German auxiliary cruiser Wolf had returned home after fifteen months in the Atlantic, Indian and Pacific oceans. A British Admiralty communication of the same date said the Wolf sank eleven ships and a number of sailing vessels. Later reports showed that the Igotz Mendi, after her capture last May, was placed in charge of a prize crew and a number of prisoners from the sunken vessels transferred to her. The Igotz Mendi followed the Wolf for four months, until they were separated south of Ireland. The German prize crew has been interned.

TAX CERTIFICATES NOT INCLUDED.

RAISING OF INTEREST RATE HAS REFERENCE TO THE THIRD LIBERTY LOAN.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—The recent increase from 4 to 4½ per cent. in interest rates on certificates of indebtedness issued in anticipation of the third Liberty Loan does not mean that the 4 per cent. rate on the so-called tax certificates will be raised, Secretary McAdoo announced today.

"No such increase is in contemplation," said Secretary McAdoo today. "The two issues are of entirely different character and purpose. The certificates issued in anticipation of the third Liberty Loan are not acceptable in payment of income and excess profits taxes and, whatever their maturity, are subject to redemption at the option of the United States on and after the first installment payment date for the third Liberty Loan; while the tax certificates are not subject to redemption and are not acceptable in payment of bond subscriptions."

About $1,125,000,000 of tax certificates have been sold. They will be received in payment of income and excess profits taxes when these are due, next June.

The men on strike charged that the company employed "spotters" to report minor infractions of the rules of the plant. The company denied this charge.

STORY IS FOR THEM.

We are all hooked together," de- Harold Hadley Story, pacifist, convicted in police court, to statements made by yesterday, the propaganda of International Bible Students' As- has the full indorsement the local "Christian pacifists," with "Rev." Floyd Hardin and "Rev." Robert Whitaker, were convicted of holding an unlawful assemblage, and the appeal of the trio will go before Judge McCormick in the Superior Court on Tuesday. Story said yesterday that he and his associates expect the moral support of the International Bible Students' Association.

"We are all hooked together, but sometimes it is difficult to find the hooks," said Story. "It is no news to me that the International Bible Students' Association has been conducting a vigorous anti-war propaganda. One of their speakers was openly giving a series of lectures in Long Beach, last fall, at the very time the Long Beach city officials threatened the Christian pacifists with dire calamities if they visited the beach community with their proposed conference.

"That speaker was saying, night after night, and without any serious opposition, things about the government and the war that were tremendously more interesting than the things I have been prosecuted for.

"I have been in touch with the International Bibble Students Association members, and a few of them took a keen and sympathetic interest in the difficulties of Hardin, Whitaker and myself, in our argument with the guardians of the 'peace' in Los Angeles.

"We are all together in our opinions regarding militarism and our opposition to all wars at all times except the war eternal of light against darkness."

THE OFFICERS.

The officers of the Los Angeles branch of the International Bible Students' Association are headed by W. Homer Lee, as chairman. F. P. Sherman is the secretary; H. M. Byers, treasurer and librarian; J. B. Brown, captain of volunteers; W. D. Housel, assistant captain of volunteers; J. Halvajian, singing leader; D. R. L. De Frese, Miss Helen Jewell and Mrs. A. S. Hambuch.

The elders of the association are headed by Scott Anderson, who has been prominent in various Socialist affairs, and who, as pastor of the South Park Christian Chuch, some months ago, preached the Russell propaganda until the result was a splitting in twain of this church membership.

Other elders are: J. A. Biglow, No. 1409 San Pedro street; Alfred Clark, No. 421 South Pacific street, Glendale; G. L. De Frese, No. 216 North Beaudry avenue; J. S. Watkins, Maryland apartments, Sixth and Grand avenue, and W. Williams, No. 1109 Clanton street.

FORMAL STATEMENT.

Griffith Jones, who was engaged by Lee to act as his attorney, made the following statement yesterday in regard to his client:

"W. Homer Lee is a student of the Bible, and thoroughly loyal to his country.

"If there is any seditious matter in any of the publications which he, as an official of the Bible Students' Association, handles, he will immediately cease the sale and distribution of the same.

"From the first time that Lee became a student of Pastor Russell's teachings, he has been impressed with the patriotism of the members of the organization. Only a short time ago, Judge Rutherford of New York lectured here on behalf of the organization. In that lecture Rutherford lauded the work of the President. The association is in hearty accord with President Wilson, because the President is a God-loving leader of his people. Mr. Lee believes that when the Federa' authorities investigate the matter fully they will discover that the organization is loyal to the core.

"Today Mr. Lee visited the authorities and expressed these sentiments. Tomorrow he will deliver a lecture at the Gamut Club.

"If the government officials have been unable to locate the books they desire, in the search conducted by them this morning, Mr. Lee will assist them. So will every member of the organization.

"The members believe that it is a conspiracy of other churches to discredit Pastor Russell's work. Mr. Lee says that if the full book is read, to which exception is taken, it will be clearly seen that no disloyal remarks are meant."

SAYS CALIFORNIA'S LURE IS GROWING.

BULLOCK'S SALES MANAGER, BACK FROM EAST, PREDICTS RUSH TO THIS STATE.

"I don't see why everyone who has the price of a railroad ticket, everyone who owns an automobile, everyone who has neither and yet is capable of walking, does not start at once for California! And I believe everyone would, if they knew what is here—if they realized the fact that while they are shivering, freezing, suffering back there, our flowers are in bloom and our gardens growing!"

Thus spake W. A. Holt, sales manager and advertising manager of Bullock's, upon his return from a prolonged tour of eastern cities.

"Why, do you know," said Mr. Holt, "as day after day we endured the miseries of cold and storm, I began almost to feel that California must be a myth. It didn't seem credible that while all that terrific climate was around us, there could be a place in the same world where it was as warm and lovely as it is in our Southern California. I thought it must have changed here; and when we started home, even though on the fastest trains, it seemed as though the wheels were scarcely turning, so eager was I to prove to myself that California was still here, and still the same. I feel as though I would never wish to go East again."

In regard to business conditions, Mr. Holt said that they were good back there, and that people all along the line seemed to have assumed a different attitude regarding money than at the beginning of the war.

"They seem," said he, "to be thinking less of their dollars, per se, and more of what those dollars can do, and they are letting them do it. What I mean is that people are spending freely and are giving freely to every cause. They seem to have learned that the true value of money is in its use, rather than in its mere possession."

It is Mr. Holt's belief that another season will see a great influx of people to California, both as tourists and for permanent residence.

"I found myself boasting of our advantages," said he, "until restrained by my wife, who declared that I was positively discourteous in my comparisons. I met men who had once lived out here, and who declared it as their intention to sell out and return as soon as possible, and I talked with many who are planning to make great sacrifices rather than to again endure an eastern winter."

As to spring merchandise, Mr. Holt remarked that we in Southern California will be wearing our new season's clothes, while people back East will be swathed in fur coats and under flannels.

"Just the matter of clothes, in itself, would decide me in favor of our climate," said he. "The weariness of being loaded up with heavy clothing, and the fact that such wear so detracts from the appearance, should decide every woman in favor of California.

FIRES FATAL SHOT AS CROWD PASSES.

MAN ENRAGED WHEN STRUCK BY RELATIVE, SPEEDS BULLETS THAT BRING DEATH.

Within the sight of thousands of persons who passed in the range of his bullets, Primitivo Florez, 47, a teamster living at No. 1815 Bishop road, late yesterday shot and almost instantly killed, Abram Rodriguez, his brother-in-law, in front of the Postoffice Building.

Florez fired two shots at close distance, both taking effect in the head and chest of his victim. Rodriguez died at the Receiving Hospital ten minutes after the shooting, while Florez was being brought into the Police Station.

Resentment smouldering for two years, deepened by the shock of bad news received a few hours earlier, and fanned into fury by a blow in the face, caused the shooting, Florez told Detectives Harris and Rico at the Police Station. According to the man's story, the victim owed him $80 for more than two years, steadily refusing to pay it. Yesterday the two men met, and Florez again asked for his money.

"This is what I owe you," Rodriguez is alleged to have replied, striking his brother-in-law in the face, badly lacerating it. Blinded by blood and rage, Florez drew his revolver and shot the man twice, he says. He made no attempt to escape. John O Riley, day custodian of the Federal Building, held Florez until the arrival of the police. The body of Rodriguez, who recently arrived from El Paso, was taken to the J. D. Button mortuary.

TWO BOYS INJURED.

Autos Strike Them, and One is Hurt Internally, Has Leg Broken; the Other is More Fortunate.

Two youths, one 14 and the other 18 years old, were injured in automobile and motorcycle accidents yesterday.

Theodore Witts, 18, a messenger boy, was riding his motorcycle near Tenth and Alvarado streets when he was struck by the automobile of George A. Mathews of the Burlington apartments. At the Receiving Hospital the boy was treated for a fractured leg and internal injuries.

Earnest Seren, 14, of No. 252 North Soto street, was knocked down by the automobile driven by Joseph T. Chalmers of No. 2747 Blanchard street while the lad was crossing the street near North Soto street and Brooklyn avenue. The boy received head injuries, but was not seriously hurt.

FOR WEST PICO.

Work will be started this week on a one-story brick store building for Ida E. Jacques at the northeast corner of Pico and Irolo streets. The structure will cover a ground area of 65x104 feet and will contain six stores. Frank Wilson Young is the architect.

The government's warning to practice economy may be confusing. We believe the need for economy relates, primarily, to the products of nature. Food and fuel wasted cannot be restored—and our soldiers and allies will suffer the lack of what is wasted.

But money is an entirely different matter. After giving the government sufficient to carry on the war, the balance should be put into circulation. It is the process of passing money from hand to hand that puts life blood into business.

Business enables us all to "live and let live." Furthermore, it enables ourselves and others to earn, spend and save to invest in Liberty Bonds and War Saving Stamps and contribute to the legitimate charities.

By purchasing the things that make life happier and rob the soldiers of nothing, you can enable others—as well as yourself—to be patriotic and generous.

DAYLIGHT SAVING BILL IN CONGRESS.

WOULD INCREASE PRODUCTION OF SHIPYARDS, LAWMAKERS ARE INFORMED.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Daylight Saving Bill will increase production of the shipbuilding yards and war material plants and expedite training of the national military forces, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States told Congress today in urging the passage of the Daylight Saving Bill now pending in the House after passage by the Senate.

"All along the line, daylight saving means increased efficiency in the improvement of the health, morals and social welfare of the 20,000,000 workers of the country," it was urged. "Light bills will be cut down and outdoor recreation stimulated. More than 1,500,000 tons of coal a year is the estimated saving and the saving in fuel oils is equally impressive. Great Britain, France, Italy, Germany and eight other nations have adopted daylight saving since the outbreak of the war and all of them declare it is a great success."

SEEK LOVED ONES HERE.

Aged Mother in New Zealand and Young Girl in Seattle Write to Police Chief.

Youth and age, separated by continents and oceans, yesterday were companions in cause when a young girl and an aged mother appealed to Chief of Police Butler for help in locating loved ones believed to be in this city.

The first appeal came from Mrs. Catherine Sweeney of No. 288 Hereford street, Christ Church, N. Z., who is looking for her son, Patrick W. Sweeney, who disappeared from home three years ago. He last was seen in San Pedro, according to Mrs. Sweeney's letter to Chief Butler. He left New Zealand with a cargo of lumber for a Puget Sound port and wrote from San Pedro, inclosing a picture taken near the lighthouse.

The second request for help came from Lucile Nichols, a 14-year-old girl of No. 426 Borden avenue, Seattle, Wash. She wants to locate her uncle, Jake Nichols. According to her letter she last heard from him from the Orpheum Theater here. The police have been unable to learn anything about the man.

TWO WARRANTS FOR SAME YOUNG MAN.

WHEN ARRESTED HE IS RECOGNIZED AS BEING WANTED ON ANOTHER CHARGE.

The arrest at Burbank of Ralph Duncan on suspicion of burglary, and his incarceration in the County Jail, revealed to officials of the Sheriff's office yesterday that a bench warrant had been issued on Friday for the arrest of Duncan on another charge.

Duncan and his father, George D. Duncan, were to have appeared before Justice Hinshaw on Friday to be arraigned on the charge of violating a lease contract for the purchase of an automobile from F. B. Calvert, an automobile salesman. The father appeared in court, but on the failure of the son to put in an appearance a bench warrant was issued for his arrest.

Last Thursday night Mrs. J. B. Phoenix of Burbank notified City Marshal O. S. Greenwood that two suspicious strangers were prowling in the vicinity of her home. After a short tussle with the pair the marshal placed Duncan under arrest, the other having made his escape. The prisoner was brought to Los Angeles Friday morning and placed in the County Jail. He was arraigned yesterday on the suspicion-of-burglary charge and was returned to jail, when a jailer recognized him and notified Walter Baskerville, clerk for Justice Hinshaw.

Duncan is a brother of Harry Duncan, who is now serving a prison sentence for the slaying of Police Sergeant Toolen about a year ago.

CHANGES ANNOUNCED.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE TO HAVE SOME NEW HEADS; EFFECTIVE TOMORROW.

Ewald E. Selph, recently appointed Assistant District-Attorney by District-Attorney Woolwine, has been placed in charge of the grand jury, an appointment formerly held by him, it was announced yesterday. A. H. Van Cott has been released from this duty in order to assume duties in the new civil department of which Frank Stafford is the head.

W. J. Clark, in charge of trial work, is to exchange places with Walter C. Fricke in the Justices' courts. These changes will go into effect tomorrow.

The new detective department in connection with the District-Attorney's office is to occupy the north wing of the twelfth floor of the Hall of Records. It will comprise two departments, each of which will be under the supervision of Walter Austin and A. S. Wilcox, respectively.

Too Late.

NOW FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE.

Many German Aliens Here are so Classified.

Investigators to Locate These Missing Men.

Eleven Per Cent. of Cards are Uncalled For.

Nearly 11 per cent. of the city's registered German alien enemies yesterday were classified as fugitives from justice when United States Marshal Walton, Chief of Police Butler, acting as the Chief Registrar, and more than a score of officers detailed to the registration work, completed their plans for a big drive against the men believed to have attempted to evade the Presidential proclamation relative to alien enemies.

The Germans so classified are those who made applications for registration cards, and when the final day of the registration closed, have failed to claim them. In this class, the police believe, will be found some who made unintentional errors or in other ways missed getting the needed cards. The exceedingly large number of men who did not finally claim the privilege of a card seems to point, the officials declare, to a deliberate attempt to defeat the object of the registration.

This conclusion is forced on the officials in charge of the work by the fact that the majority of the 175 cards uncalled for were placed in the doubtful class at the time when the cards were being issued. The men so classified were told to return after the officers had a chance to make a second investigation into their statements.

After a conference between Mr. Walton, Chief Butler and Hiram J. Wambold, his secretary, who handled the details and organized the registration squads, it was decided to grant a week's grace to those who failed to claim their cards. In each of the registration precincts the cards will remain to await the claimants, and investigators will be placed at work checking up the names of men classified as fugitives, and an attempt to learn their whereabout will be made.

Marshal Walton thanked the police for the excellent work performed by them.

The complete figures are:

	Registered.	Cards issued.	Uncalled.	Jailed.
Central division	572	775	75	10
University division ..	478	422	44	1
East Side division....	81	68	12	4
Boyle Heights division	47	41	6	0
San Pedro division....	58	54	4	4
Hollywood division ..	93	77	16	1
Sawtelle division ...	30	28	2	1
Totals 1,635		1,465	179	21

The difference in some totals, it was explained by Secretary Wambold, is due to the fact that some men received their cards and later were arrested, and that others were arrested before their examinations were complete.

WOMAN MAY GAIN FREEDOM TOMORROW.

BONDSMEN FOR MARIE PINZON EDWARDS DO NOT ARRIVE IN TIME FOR JUDGE TO ACT.

Absence of two bondsmen from the city, prevented the release on bail yesterday of Marie Pinzon Edwards, who is awaiting a second trial for the alleged murder of State Senator Henry H. Lyon.

Miss Edwards was in court yesterday morning with her attorneys, Guy Eddie and Charles R. Morfoot, and Judge Willis had expressed a willingness to give the defendant her liberty, under certain conditions, pending the second hearing of the case on April 15.

Dr. Cecil Reynolds, alienist, who testified at the last trial, submitted an affidavit stating that Miss Edwards's state of health necessitated her being released from jail. Both the bondsmen and medical affidavits were to have been submitted to Judge Willis at 5 o'clock last evening but as the persons who had expressed a willingness to go on the bond had not arrived from Bakersfield, the matter was put off until tomorrow morning.

Judge Willis will permit the defendant to be released on $10,000 bail, with the understanding that she is to place herself in the hands of respectable persons and will not, at any time before her re-commitment, visit Vernon, Watts, Venice, or any locality frequented by persons of questionable reputation.

The court, in explaining his reasons for allowing bail at this time, stated it was customary for him to make such an order only after proper medical certificates had been submitted as to the state of the defendant's health, and after a miscarriage of justice such as happened in the case of Marie Edwards.

Simple Way To End Dandruff

There is one sure way that has never failed to remove dandruff at once, and that is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, common liquid arvon from any drug store (this is all you will need), apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in generally with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

SUES TO ENJOIN SALE OF HOLLYWOOD BONDS.

CLAIM MADE THAT THEY ARE INVALID, NECESSITATING ANOTHER ELECTION.

That the Hollywood water bonds are invalid and that it will be necessary to hold another election before the present bonds can be sold, are claims made in an injunction suit filed in the Superior Court yesterday by H. W. Kelly, a resident of Hollywood, through his attorney, John Dennison. The election was held on October 18, 1916, and 102 bonds have already been issued and some of them sold.

The claim is also made that when the bonds were first issued it was stated that the interest must not exceed 6 per cent. It is further stated that afterwards the city passed an ordinance providing a rate of only 5 per cent. for the bonds. Then sections of the ordinance were repealed and another ordinance was passed amending the original one. This new ordinance provides that the 102 bonds already issued shall bear 5 per cent. interest, and the other 918 bonds, 5½ per cent.

Should the injunction be granted, it means that before the bonds are again placed on the market another campaign must be launched and the work that has already been accomplished, must be gone over again by the people of the Hollywood Improvement District.

TO DANCE FOR WAR CAMP COMMUNITY.

MANY RESERVATIONS MADE FOR BENEFIT AT HOTEL HUNTINGTON.

Demand for reservations for the ball and vaudeville performance to be given next Thursday evening, at the Hotel Huntington, Pasadena, for the benefit of the war camp community fund, has been brisk, it was announced yesterday by Mrs. Howard Huntington, chairman of the committee on arrangements.

Unlike many benefit performances, every dollar which is paid for tickets or in tips to the society girls who will be in charge of the coatroom will find its way directly into the fund, a national enterprise having as its object adequate entertainment for American soldiers and sailors at the various cantonments throughout the country. This is insured by the donation of the Huntington and the services of its staff by D. M. Linnard and the payment of all expenses by the guarantors of the event.

California products only—fish, fruit, vegetables, etc.—will be used in the preparation of the supper. The ball will open at 8:30 o'clock. At 11 o'clock, supper will be served in the dining-room, where a large stage has been erected. William H. Crane, Dustin Farnum, Wallace Reid, performers on next week's bills at the Orpheum and at Pantages and several others will provide the entertainment.

Those who have already reserved tables include Mmes. Allan C. Balch, Ernest A. Bryant, Fred H. Bixby, Russell Taylor, Willoughby Rodman, Fred Sewell, Freeman Ford, F. W. Emery, E. H. Moulton, W. A. Clark, Jr., Michael Connell, Robert A. Rowan, J. Olney Allebone, A. C. Volk, Howard Huntington, Frederick Stevens, Joseph Hixon, Harold Ayer, Bartlett Shidler, George F. Cruickshank, William May Garland and Samuel Storrow.

CHILD BADLY BURNED.

Two-Year-Old Playing in the Yard Runs too Close to a Rubbish Fire.

Anita Fries, 2-year-old daughter of Harry Fries of No. 702 Cornwall street, was probably fatally burned yesterday while playing in the yard of her home. She was taken to the County Hospital, where the physicians said they feared she would not recover.

The child, according to police report, was playing with other children when she ran too close to a rubbish fire. Her cries brought Mrs. Fries to the yard, who stripped the burning clothes from the little body, but not in time to prevent severe burns.

Preparing.

SEEK MORE VOLUNTEERS FOR TRAINING SCHOOL.

AIDED by women of the community, the Hollywood Military Training School, which is in the nature of a volunteer officers' training camp, will begin tomorrow a campaign for new members. The organization has been in existence about three months, has sixty members and is self-sustaining. Khaki tents will serve as recruiting quarters where the women will explain the aims of the school and its slogan, "Save Your Country Money by Preparing Yourself at Home."

The school is composed of patriotic business men who support the institution by assessing themselves $1 a month dues and occasional collections on drill nights. The instructor is Capt. A. T. Easton of the Harvard Military School and the drill hours are 7:30 to 9:30 o'clock Monday and Friday evenings.

The purpose of the school is to train the members to such a degree of proficiency that they, in turn can drill and train others. Draft men who have not been called and men under and over draft age will be trained free of charge. The members of the school believe that this system will save the government much time and money, for instead of raw recruits the men called to the colors will have had more or less training.

The school has no official standing, as its requirements do not conform with those of the government training camps and there are no drill officers available. One of the principal variations is that no physical examination is required. The organization, however, has the encouragement of Federal and State officials and already two of its members have received commissions as lieutenants.

The officers are C. C. Craig, president; Alfred Bartlett, William Beesmire, George C. Mansfield and Raymond Wells.

Free to 50,000 Catarrh Sufferer

The Most Astonishing, the Most Successful Home Treatm Ever Discovered for Nasal, Bronchial, Throat, Stomach Bladder and Other Symptoms of Systemic Hyper-secretions of the Mucous Membrane.

A TRIAL TREATMENT OF THIS REMARKABLE DISCOVERY FREE TO ALL WHO WRITE.

There is absolutely no other way to overcome Catarrh except by home self-treatment. You have positively got to apply the treatment yourself. With this important fact in mind, C. E. Gauss, of Marshall, Mich., has perfected the most remarkable combination treatment ever discovered. Having cured completely hundreds of his friends, neighbors and others, he now offers to send free to all a trial treatment direct to your home. It is enough of a treatment to convince. It gives positive relief. You realize the relief. You are conscious of it. This is one of the most important discoveries ever made, for it is a fact that nine people in ten have Catarrh, but do not realize how badly they have it.

A Mouth of Corruption

Catarrh is the One Disease that is not imagination. The hawking, spitting, sneezing, wheezing, snuffling, blowing and gagging are not a habit, these distressing and offensive efforts to gain relief are not stopped by a mere command of the mind. No amount of will power, however, determined, can cure catarrh.

It requires help to overcome a disease that although local in character may and often does permeate the entire system. For although you know you have catarrh you do not know how badly you have it. You may have what you believe is only Nasal Catarrh, but even so, it is a threat to your general health.

Here is a sensible, rational, home self-treatment, just as effective, just as searching, just as penetrating, as cleansing, as purifying as could be had from any source, even if you paid a hundred times as much.

A nose that dribbles with mucus is an indication of disease. A breath tainted with the odor of catarrh is an offense against all health and decency. A stomach filled with droppings from diseased nasal cavities may cause untold misery. The bowels clogged with strings of ropy mucus indicate a body literally reeking with catarrh.

The blood, swarming with millions of catarrh germs, entails upon the kidneys a labor, that may break them down; the lungs and bronchial tubes, scourged with the destructive influence of systemic catarrh, can lead to the most serious consequences.

Not Imagination

When you get up in the morning with coated tongue, a breath that strikes terror to those around you; when you gag and hawk and cough and spit and choke, do you try to make yourself believe that all of this corruption is confined entirely to your nose and mouth?

Is it any wonder that sickness is everywhere? Thousands are seeking bracers, tonics, strong drugs and other poisons for relief when their trouble is catarrh and nothing else. And when you realize that the whole body is a vast camping ground for the myriad of poison germs hatched every second in the small space back of the nostrils, can you wonder that 50,000 free trial treatments will not begin to supply the demand once that people wake up to a full realization of the dangers from catarrh?

Will Power Is Useless

You know from experience that you cannot cure catarrh by forgetting it. But you can learn from a positive demonstration how to cure catarrh, with this combined treatment.

This is an educational move on my part. I want everyone to try my treatment. I ask no money, no questions. I have but the one remedy, a discovery that is worth your while to send for, whether you are a millionaire or a worker by the day. Ca no respecter of persons. It the poor and the rich alike. REDLANDS STUDENTS BUY THRIFT STAMPS.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDLANDS, March 2.—The school children of Redlands are doing a great big bit towards winning the war for they have now subscribed to $1478.13 of War Savings Stamps and are the holders of $5750 in Liberty Bonds. Not only that, but there is a Junior Red Cross in each school and the total membership here is 1896.

There is a decided rivalry among the schools in the buying of War Savings Stamps and this week the Kingsbury school is far in the lead. Kingsbury has $636.53 to its credit with McKinley next, with $434.60. Lugonia has $132.60, Lincoln $129.50, Lowell $78.25, Franklin $30, and Crafton school has purchased $25.75, or a stamp for each one in the school.

The boys are doing as much Red Cross work as the girls and they have become quite proficient in the knitting of afghans which are so badly needed for relief work. The girls are also knitting socks and sweaters and are doing great work in the making of bandages.

The membership of the schools in the Junior Red Cross is, High School 500; Lugonia 325; McKinley 243; Kingsbury 290; Lowell 170; Lincoln 147; Franklin 125, and Crafton 96.

ALLEGED SLACKER ARRESTED IN EAST.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDLANDS, March 2.—Albert A. Adams, who registered in this district and failed to return his questionnaire, has been located in Columbus, O., by the police there and was arrested for evading the draft. Adams claimed that he had a chance to get a job and left this country in a hurry and forgot to leave his address.

He was arrested on advices by the local board, who learned from his wife in Los Angeles that he was in Columbus. Mrs. Adams claims that he cannot make a plea for exemption as he has not contributed a cent to her support for some time. He left her in January after she had signed exemption papers for him.

He asked permission to put in his questionnaire at Columbus and it was granted him.

FILES PETITION FOR OFFICE OF TRUSTEE.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

COLTON, March 2.—The first nominating petition was filed in the City Trustee campaign today, that of O. G. Crawford, well-known business man of the city, who has been "drafted" by the residents of the north end of town, which section is not now represented on the board. There are two vacancies to be filled. So far Mr. Crawford and W. C. Malone, at present a trustee, are the only announced candidates but it is rumored that Peter Domenigoni is about to toss his hat in the ring.

Evidently the office of City Clerk is going to be hotly contested as there are now five aspirants, three women and two men. Those whose candidacy is announced are Mrs. Olive Phillips, Mrs. Alice Bishop, Miss Josephine Scribner, J. H. Maxwell and Elijah Lester. All have a strong backing and the race is warming up in interest as the days pass. The election comes off April 8.

DIVER INSPECTING PIER FOUNDATION.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SANTA MONICA, March 2.—A professional diver from San Pedro is making a thorough examination of the municipal pier in order to ascertain the damage done by recent storms to the concrete piling of the structure. About three weeks ago one of the piles suddenly collapsed after a storm, allowing a section of the pier on the north side to settle for about twelve inches over an area of about fifty feet in length.

Fearing that some of the other parts of the piling might be affected below the water line, Commissioner W. H. Carter has employed the diver, who is sounding each separate pile. When the work is completed he will report on their condition to the City Commissioners.

POMPANO RUNNING BIG AT LONG WHARF.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SANTA MONICA, March 2.—An unusually good run of pompano is reported in the bay today by A. R. Muller of the Long Wharf. Fishermen on the piers are getting exceptional catches, not only of this delicately-flavored fish, but also of perch and rock bass, all of which are schooling in Santa Monica Bay to the great delight of the local and visiting anglers. The market fishermen are also in luck the last few days since the rains, reporting good hauls of halibut in their nets offshore.

Protests.

CONGRESSIONAL INQUIRY AT RIVERSIDE PROPOSED.

Osborne Demands an Apology from the War Department Chiefs.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON BUREAU OF THE TIMES, March 2.—A Congressional investigation of the Riverside contract for the buildings at the aviation camp there is more than probable tonight. This afternoon Congressmen Kettner and Osborne called on Secretary of War Baker, and demanded an explanation and an apology for the conduct of Assistant Secretary of War Crowell in breaking his word and letting the contract to Twohy Bros. Construction Company of Portland, Or.

In order to protect themselves and have the evidence ready to present on the floor of Congress, both Congressmen made their protest in writing. If the War Department does not reply at once the matter will go to Congress and if the reply is not satisfactory it will be made the subject of Congressional inquiry.

OSBORNE'S LETTER.

Congressman Osborne's letter in full as follows:

Hon. Newton D. Baker,
Secretary of War,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Secretary:

My colleague—Hon. William Kettner, representing the San Diego district of California—and myself called at your office last Monday morning to lay before you a matter that we considered of considerable importance. We were in receipt of a large number of telegrams from the commercial organizations, heads of the great financial institutions, and from prominent citizens of our portion of the State, protesting the awarding of the contract for constructing the aviation base near Riverside, Cal., which is in Southern California, to a contracting firm from another State. The policy had been so frequently announced that it was the purpose of the government to award contracts for war emergency work in various parts of the country to the localities in which the work was to be done where suitable agencies could be found, that we had supposed it to be a settled policy, as it is a wise one.

There are at least a half-dozen or perhaps a dozen contracting firms in Southern California capable of carrying out any contract for construction, however large, and several of them we knew to be competitors for this work. My colleague and myself had no preference as to any particular firm, nor had we any prejudices as to the outside firm referred to. We felt, however, that in view of the great number and earnestness of the protesting dispatches received that awarding of the contract to an outside firm would be more than a great disappointment to our people, and that in view of the many efforts and sacrifices which our people are being asked to make it would be most depressing to have the mistake made of selecting an outside firm at this time. We were particularly solicitous of the coming Liberty Loan, which, under the most favorable circumstances would be difficult.

TO SEE ASSISTANT.

Upon calling at your office for the purpose of laying the matter before you personally, Mr. Keppel, one of your secretaries stated that you requested that we should lay the matter before the assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Crowell, and that if we were not satisfied with the result that we should then call on you. We, therefore, did lay the matter before Assistant Secretary Crowell, showing him some of the dispatches which we had received. Mr. Crowell sent for Maj. Starratt, who brought over a mass of telegrams that he had received on the same subject. After considering the matter Mr. Crowell informed Mr. Kettner and myself that the contract would not be awarded to the outside firm referred to and would be awarded to some one of the Southern California contracting firms who were applicants.

This conclusion was well understood and relied upon it religiously as though given by yourself. This assurance being entirely satisfactory we did not take the matter up with you personally as you had suggested. Yesterday I called Maj. Starratt on the telephone to inquire whether the award had been made and he referred me to Col. Edgar, in charge of construction. Col. Edgar, to my astonishment, informed me that the award had been given to the outside firm referred to; that he had received orders from the Secretary of War to so award the contract, and that he had no alternative in the matter.

CONFIRMED BY CROWELL.

Some four hours later Assistant Secretary Crowell telephoned our offices that the contract had been awarded as Col. Edgar had previously informed us. Two things I wish to say: The first is, that in future I shall, as a member of Congress, decline to have any further business dealings with the present assistant Secretary of War and desire to do all my business with you personally, from whom I have invariably received courtesy and truthful communications. If a member of Congress, representing a half-million people, may not rely upon the statements of officials with whom he transacts business, so far, at least, that agreements entered into will not be summarily broken and later brought to one's attention hours after the act has been consumated by a curt message over the telephone, there can be no stability or reliance upon official communications.

I understand that the firm referred to, made claim that it was a Southern California firm. This is based upon the fact that the firm is "executing" a contract for some railroad building between San Diego and the Colorado River. Its relations to the community are precisely like those of any New York or other large contracting firm which bids for work in any part of the United States, and which would on the strength of receiving such contracts claim to be a firm of that particular locality.

COMPLAINT.

Our complaint is two-fold: first, that we were misled by the Assistant Secretary of War to such an extent that we had informed some of our correspondents at home that he had given us the positive assurances which I have stated, thereby placing us in a most embarrassing position in regard to our own people.

Second: That a real and serious injury has been done the national interests in the war by planting a feeling of dissatisfaction among our people who are to be called upon shortly for increased sacrifices and large subscriptions to the third Liberty Loan. Our people are extremely sensitive to any apparent invasion of their rights and dignity, and the effect of a rebuff of this kind, and at this time is liable to produce effects out of all proportion to the thing itself. It also has the effect of placing upon the Congressional delegation and the leading citizens of our localities a burden of explanation at this time that we ought not to be called upon to bear in connection with the Liberty Loans, etc. These considerations were laid before the Assistant Secretary before Maj. Starratt and before members of the War Industries Board in perfect good faith and I cannot tell you how deeply we feel the summary overriding of our just protests and those of our people.

Very respectfully yours,
[Signed] H. Z. OSBORNE, M.C.

KEEL PLATES LAID FOR THIRD VESSEL.

SHIPBUILDING COMPANY RUSHING WORK ON BIG STEEL FREIGHTERS.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONG BEACH, March 2.—Keel plates were laid today at the yards of the Craig Shipbuilding Company for the third of the 6000-ton vessels to be built by the local concern for the United States government. The ships will cost more than $1,000,000 apiece, each measuring 341 feet in length.

Work on the first of the trio of freighters has progressed to the point where it will be ready for launching within the next six weeks.

The Eldorado, a sister ship of the Silverado, recently launched at the Craig yards, also will be ready for launching in a few weeks. The Eldorado is a 3000-ton freighter.

Mrs. Virginia Bourquoin, 79 years old, of Cedar Falls, Iowa, died today following a stroke of apoplexy. The landlady of the Miramar apartments, on East Third street, where the aged tourist was stopping, suspected something was wrong when Mrs. Bourquoin failed to respond to a knock on the door and she found it locked on the inside.

The police were called and the door forced, revealing the aged woman lying on the bed gasping for breath.

Physicians were summoned, but were unable to save her. She leaves a daughter, Mrs. N. M. Graham, and a son, L. E. Bourquoin, both of Cedar Falls, Iowa.

Long Beach City Commissioners today passed an ordinance establishing a license of $100 for airmen carrying on a "for hire" business on the beach.

Lemons Beautify!

Strain lemon juice well before mixing and massage face, neck, arms, hands.

Here is told how to prepare an inexpensive lemon lotion which can be used to bring back to any skin the sweet freshness of which it has been robbed by trying atmospheric conditions. Wind-chafe, roughness, tan and redness are warded off and those tell-tale lines of care or of age are softened away.

The juice of two fresh lemons strained into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white makes a whole quarter pint of the most remarkable lemon skin beautifier at about the cost one must pay for a small jar of the ordinary cold creams. Care should be taken to strain the lemon juice through a fine cloth so no lemon pulp gets in, then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach and remove such blemishes as freckles, sallowness and tan, and is the ideal skin softener, smoothener and beautifier.

Just try it! Get three ounces of orchard white at any pharmacy and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms and hands, and see for yourself.

CANDIDATES OUT IN SHOALS FOR OFFICE.

VENICE MUNICIPAL ELECTION PROMISES TO BE REPLETE WITH THRILLS.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

VENICE, March 2.—With about twenty candidates in the ring for the Venice general municipal election of April 8, next, and only six offices to fill, this city is looking forward to an exciting campaign in the next few weeks. Next week, however, "the seam roller" is expected to get busy and wise ones are predicting that several of those now blushingly looking forward to political preferment will be ironed out flat before many days have passed.

In addition to filling the vacancies caused by the expiration of the term of office of three Trustees, the City Clerk and the City Treasurer, another Trustee will be elected to fill the unexpired term of Myron J. Carr, who resigned a few days previous to the recall election of November 27 last, who had two years yet to run. The only other remaining member of the board whose term does not expire is Trustee Edward A. Gerety, who was elected for the same term as Mr. Carr.

Mayor Rutherford B. Harris and Trustees William G. Lutz, Alfred F. McDonald, Edward S. Hill, are all candidates for re-election, while A. E. Coles, John Stein, C. W. Holbrook, George Walter, Joseph L. Walters, E. R. Watson, Sr., had all taken out nomination papers today, except Trustee McDonald. John G. Harrah, who came within three votes of winning over Hill at the November election, and Constable Frank J. Barton are expected to take out their papers soon. They have until March 13 to comply with the law in this respect.

Thomas Wilde, City Clerk, and James T. Peasgood, Jr., City Treasurer, have both filed papers to succeed themselves, and Thomas H. Hanna, who made a strong race last fall for the city clerkship, without the indorsement of any political body, has also taken out papers again.

The question of permitting liquor licenses, the increase of the Trustees' salary from $[illegible] a week to $75 a month, and a franchise for making Venice the terminal for an autobus line to Los Angeles, will all go on the ballot at the coming election.

BIG PARADE STARTS THRIFT STAMP DRIVE.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SANTA MONICA, March 2.—Santa Monica began its Thrift Stamp drive with a parade early this morning. Headed by Grand Marshal Guy B[illegible]ndy on his white horse, and the Municipal Band, Mayor S. L. Berkeley, Chief of Police F. W. Ferguson, and other city officials, a squadron of more than 200 automobiles laden with club women, High School girls and boys, members of the Young Men's City Club and others, filed through the principal streets.

Later the parade dispersed, the machines each taking a section of the residence district to cover, the young women leaving the cars in order to canvass residences and to tag them for a Thrift Stamp Sale. Although the result of the day's work has not yet been totalled, the drive was highly successful, according to Moe F[illegible]gel, president of the Young Men's City Club, the organization that planned today's campaign.

HARBOR MAN ABOARD GERMAN PRIZE SHIP.

WAS FORMERLY SKIPPER ON JOHN BARNESON'S YACHT AT THIS PORT.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

LOS ANGELES HARBOR, March 2.—Capt. John Cameron, who, according to a Copenhagen dispatch today was rescued from the Spanish steamer Igotz Mendi after having been a captive of the Germans for eight months with his wife and daughter, was formerly a resident of this place.

The Igotz Mendi went ashore while trying to reach a German port after having been captured by the German Raider Sea Wolf. When the Sea Wolf sunk the old whaling vessel Beluga in the South Seas, of which Capt. Cameron was master, he was put aboard the Spanish steamer on account of the crowded conditions on the Sea Wolf.

FORMER RESIDENT.

Capt. Cameron was skipper on the yacht Edris owned by Capt. John Barneson of the General Petroleum Company, while the yacht made this harbor its home port. He lived with his family at No. 1333 Palos Verdes street, San Pedro. When the Edris was taken to San Francisco, Capt. Cameron moved there and later took command of the old whaler when it was sent to the South Seas with cargo from San Francisco. The vessel had long been laid up in Oakland Creek and was resurrected through the pressing need of bottoms. Capt. Cameron was accompanied by his wife and their 4-year-old daughter, Juanita. Another daughter was left behind at Berkeley in care of a friend.

IMPORTANT CAPTURE.

Gus Anderson, second mate on the steamer Providencia, who was arrested last night while attempting to leave the vessel without permission, may be the means of furnishing valuable information to the government. It is said that in his pockets were papers very much desired by secret service men. Anderson was turned over to the United States Marshal after having been arrested by Lieut. Barrett of the naval training station.

CANADIAN OFFICER RED CROSS SPEAKER.

GIVES THRILLING ACCOUNT OF HOW IT FEELS TO BE "GASSED" BY HUNS.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SANTA MONICA, March 2.—Under the auspices of the American Red Cross and the British Ambulance Society, the new headquarters of the Santa Monica Bay Chapter of the latter organization were formally opened today in the building formerly known as the Sunset Inn. Capt. T. D. Harris of the Eighth Canadians, who is now on detached duty as a member of the British Recruiting Mission, was the guest of honor. He paid a glowing tribute to the work of the Red Cross of both the British and American branches, saying that if it had not been for the heroic work of its members he would not have been alive to address today's gathering.

The captain told of his experience in being with the Canadians at the second battle of Ypres in April, 1915, when the Germans first used gas as a means of attack. His battalion, he said, was almost wiped out, and yet "the little black devils," as the regiment had been dubbed, grimly held the line, in spite of the fact that they had no gas masks or any similar protection, such as are now given the troops. The greenish clouds of chlorine gas that rolled into the Canadian trenches, the captain told his auditors, was at first mistaken by his men for the powder smoke of shrapnel exploding near the ground, and by the time they discovered their mistake, it was too late to prevent serious injury. He, himself, was so badly "gassed" that he was invalided home. He had joined the regiment in August, 1914, and it was among the first Canadian contingents to go overseas.

Among the other speakers were Mayor Berkeley of Santa Monica and Dr. W. G. Bowers of Los Angeles, president of the Southern California Branch of the British Ambulance Society. It is planned to have both societies make use of the headquarters as a workroom in the future.

WE CURE
Piles, Fistula
And All Rectal Diseases
Without an Operation

For twenty-five years we have been curing diseases of the rectum and lower bowel. During that time our experience has enabled us to develop a method that is superior to others. We cure without surgery, and our patients are not confined in bed and seldom lose a moment's time from their business.

Our method is not a "home cure" nor a "correspondence treatment," but it is an application of skilled treatments administered under the most rigid antiseptic conditions in our office.

1530 Melford St.,
Glendale, California,
July 15, 1917.
DEAR DRS. WHITE & WAINWRIGHT:
I take great pleasure in testifying to the effectiveness of your painless method of treating hemorrhoids. I am cured after years of suffering and now I am capable of doing my work in comfort.
I am only too glad to advise my friends who are sufferers that you really cure hemorrhoids (Piles) and I shall be glad also to answer all inquiries relative thereto.
Very respectfully yours,
I am sir,
REV. WM. H. WALKER.

We solicit old, severe and obstinate cases of fistula, prolapsus, fissure and ulceration that have heretofore resisted all treatments employed. If you are a sufferer from rectal trouble, we invite you to investigate our method thoroughly by talking or writing to any of our cured patients. If you will call at our office we shall be pleased to give you the names and addresses of many well-known Los Angeles people we have cured, whom you may interview in regard to our treatment.

OLD PRESCRIPTION FOR WEAK KIDNEYS

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited, to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy that I know of has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact that so many people claim it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by Parcels Post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention the Los Angeles Sunday Times. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.

Safe Home Treatment for Objectionable Hairs
(Boudoir Secrets)

The electric needle is not required for the removal of hair or fuzz, for with the use of plain delatone the most stubborn growth can be quickly banished. A paste is made with water and a little of the powder, then spread over the hairy surface. In about 2 minutes it is rubbed off and the skin washed. This simple treatment not only removes the hair but leaves the skin free from blemish. Be sure you get the genuine delatone.

STOMACH UPSET?
Get at the Real Cause—Take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets

That's what thousands of stomach sufferers are doing now. Instead of taking tonics, or trying to patch up a poor digestion, they are attacking the real cause of the ailment—clogged liver and disordered bowels.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets arouse the liver in a soothing, healing way. When the liver and bowels are performing their natural functions, away goes indigestion and stomach troubles.

If you have a bad taste in your mouth, tongue coated, appetite poor, lazy, don't-care feeling, no ambition or energy, troubled with undigested foods, you should take Olive Tablets, the substitute for calomel.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are a purely vegetable compound mixed with olive oil. You will know them by their olive color. They do the work without griping, cramps or pain.

Take one or two at bedtime for quick relief, so you can eat what you like. At 10c and 25c per box. All druggists.

KAISER'S SPY SYSTEM RUINING SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA GERMANS

Public Determination to Stamp Out the Menace of Secret Espionage Threatens the Livelihood of Many of the Alien Enemy Races Here.

[illegible] WHAT would be a sort of poetic justice, did its rigors not infrequently fall upon innocent people, the list of principal victims [illegible] the Kaiser's way of making war [illegible] an ever-growing extent, [illegible] German people themselves, and [illegible] the alien enemy races [illegible]. How this has worked out [illegible] proper is well known. [illegible] is the story of how the [illegible] distrust of things German, [illegible] Germany's dishonorable, [illegible]-back methods, are work[illegible] ruin of her former sub[illegible] and their descendants in this [illegible]

[illegible] has this come to be more [illegible] than in Southern California, the home of over 100,000 people of German and Austrian descent. [illegible] the Army Intelligence Bureau authority for the statement [illegible] of these people are [illegible] with America in the [illegible] their money, their efforts, [illegible] and active support. But [illegible] a fact that the sinister [illegible] in our midst of their hun[illegible] thousands— of construct[illegible] actively disloyal have [illegible] such grave suspicion to arise [illegible] everything that looks or sounds [illegible] that thousands of livelihoods are in jeopardy. In scores of [illegible] loyal persons of German[illegible] names have appealed to [illegible] to change them, because [illegible] not earn a living under [illegible] cognomen. Some have [illegible] asked to be interned. [illegible] criminals have made the [illegible] sometimes perhaps with a [illegible] of truth—that the only way [illegible] get any American money [illegible] steal it.

SPY SYSTEM TO BLAME.

[illegible] Americans in whose veins [illegible] of the hated Teuton blood [illegible] hesitate to put the blame for [illegible] condition where it belongs—on [illegible] shoulders of Germany's military [illegible]. The investigations of the [illegible] of Justice and the Army [illegible] Bureau have proven be[illegible] possibility of dispute that [illegible] California is literally hon[illegible] with German agents of [illegible] degree of activity, from the [illegible], firebug and spy to the [illegible] service of the Father[illegible] confined to spreading her [illegible] pro-German, anti-produc[illegible] fostering, anti-adminis[illegible] propaganda. This fact has [illegible] thoroughly impressed upon the [illegible] the government even going [illegible] extent of placarding Los An[illegible] with notices warning Ameri[illegible] to beware of the alien enemy [illegible] everywhere. It is also clear[illegible] understood that the typical Ger[illegible] spy is no mysterious stran[illegible] but nearly always persons of [illegible] residence in the com[illegible]. Small wonder, then, that [illegible] the added animus felt against [illegible] and unfair foe, loyal Amer[illegible] look askance at anything [illegible] of Germanism.

SITUATION STRAINED.

[illegible] employers are refusing to [illegible] Germans and Austrians be[illegible] of the public sentiment against [illegible]. It has come to pass that the [illegible] man who desires to hold [illegible] of patronage cannot keep [illegible] and Austrian employees in [illegible] where they come in direct [illegible] with the public.

[illegible] are in Los Angeles today [illegible] business houses employing from fifty to 300 workers each, which have literally been compelled by public sentiment to place Anglo-Saxon employees in the foreground. There are few instances where Germans loyal to America have been discharged, but there are many places where they have been shifted into the background where the public does not come into direct contact with them. As time goes on and the war situation becomes more strained, the labor situation, so far as Germans are concerned, will become still more critical, employers predict.

"It is a condition which must be thoughtfully considered," says William L. Clark, superintendent of the Public Employment Bureau. "Put yourself in the position of the employer—the business man who depends upon public patronage. People who do the buying are getting rather touchy about the Germans and Austrians.

"They are coming to the point where they are refusing to spend money with them. Personally I believe that few employers are throwing out Germans and Austrians because of personal prejudice. But what is a man to do when a woman comes into his store and says she will close her account and quit patronizing him if it is necessary that she be waited upon by a man or woman who speaks the accent of the Central powers?

"In the shoe stores, groceries, dry goods stores, cigar stands and in fact everywhere that people pass money over the counters for value received workers of the Allied nations, French, English or United States subjects—can get a premium for their labor nowadays, if they are good clerks. The fact that a man or woman may speak with a German accent is sufficient disqualification for employment in many business houses now, and it is equally as unlucky to have the features of a German or Austrian. The public wants American-sold goods as well as American-made goods."

Local employment agencies say that this situation is most noticeable in business houses where goods are sold across the counter, but that it extends into the ranks of stenographers, shipping clerks, book-keepers, and even to housekeepers.

In the cafeterias and most of the cafes nearly all the waitresses and servers are now American or French, where a year ago the majority were of a Teutonic strain.

SOME INSTANCES.

Early in December a bootblack in this city was doing a thriving business, because his charge was but five cents. Patronage gradually drifted away from him, however, and one day two of his old customers met at a ten-cent shine stand. One of them asked the other why he had quit the five-cent shine parlor. His reply was that he quit because he learned that the bootblack was an Austrian.

A few days ago, Alex Sulzer, a native of Austria, walked into the police station at Venice and asked to be interned. He explained that he is not pro-German, but that he was unable to obtain employment, because he spoke English with a Teuton accent. According to his story he had applied for work at employment agencies in all the cities between here and Salt Lake City, but had been unable to obtain work of any kind.

Paul Hermkes, the German youth who burglarized the Leighton Hotel, told the police that he took to crime because he looked and talked so German that he could not get work, and that it had been his intention to rob as many Americans as possible in order to get even.

Otto Steinhardt, an alleged check forger for whose internment a Presidential warrant was recently requisitioned by Federal authorities, pleaded that he was compelled to forge checks here because he could not get anything to do. He said that, up to the outbreak of the war, he had been engaged as a field agent for the German General Export Company, of Hamburg and Berlin, in conducting a boycott against United States, English, French, Belgian and Italian made goods in South America. It was his business to spend German money in fomenting plans for stifling trade

Important to Nation.

LOS ANGELES CALLED ON TO HELP BOY SCOUT MOVEMENT.

ON Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week patriotic citizens of Southern California will be asked to contribute $60,000 to the fund for the maintenance and extension of the work of the Boy Scouts of America.

The drive is predicated upon what this organization has already done for the cause of the United States and the other allied nations in the war. In the last Liberty Loan campaign the 300,000 Boy Scouts in America raised $127,000,000 and secured one in every eighteen bonds sold in the entire country. For this service Colin H. Livingstone, the national president, received a personal letter of thanks from Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo, as follows:

January 15, 1918.

Dear Mr. Livingstone:

I have been deeply impressed and touched by the splendid spirit of co-operation and the tireless energy of the Boy Scouts in both the first and second Liberty Loan campaign. I feel that a large part of these stupendous undertakings have been earned by the Boy Scouts. The splendid service of the Boy Scouts in all of the various war campaigns have proved them heroes of the old republic and fit successors of the men who are now fighting the battles of democracy in France and upon the high seas.

I understand the Boy Scouts of America are to make at this time a campaign for men and money. Men to furnish leadership for boys in the different communities and money to maintain and create greater efficiency in the field. This is a most commendable effort. Let me join in urging that the men of the country who can should get into and support this great organization as scoutmasters and leaders, and everyone who has the money should contribute liberally. The Boy Scouts of America are one of the greatest of our war facilities. They are helping us win. They must be upheld. They need men and money now. Give your help unstintingly and at once.

Cordially yours,

WILLIAM G. M'ADOO.

PRAISED BY PRESIDENT.

President Wilson, in a recent communication to Mr. Livingstone, said:

"Anything that is done or given to increase the war efficiency of the Boy Scouts of America will be a real contribution to the nation and will help to win the war. The fine efficiency of the Boy Scouts of America in serving the country must, of course, be maintained. The army and navy have heavily drawn upon its ranks for men who have gone forth very glady to make, if need be, the supreme sacrifice. Men are needed, as consequence, as scoutmasters and leaders to take their places. Money is needed, moreover, to build up this efficient unit of the national service to its full strength."

H. D. Cross, national field scout commissioner for the Boy Scouts, and Pacific Coast representative of the National Council of New York City, is here at the invitation of Arthur Letts and the local committee in the interest of the movement. He has established temporary headquarters in room 330 Van Nuys Building. Speaking of the great need for quickening work for the boys of the United States at this time, he said yesterday:

"The tremendous efforts which are now being put forth in every community to provide leadership for the activities of the men at the front are working to the great disadvantage of our own boys at home. War work of every kind monopolizes the limelight. Fathers and brothers have gone to the front and home influences are everywhere weakened for the growing boy. We may even see the time when older sisters and mothers will be forced to work in munitions factories, such as has been the case in other of the belligerent nations.

GRAVE NEW PROBLEM.

"I have just made a trip throughout the entire Pacific Coast and find that the problem of the increase of

An Anchor to Windward

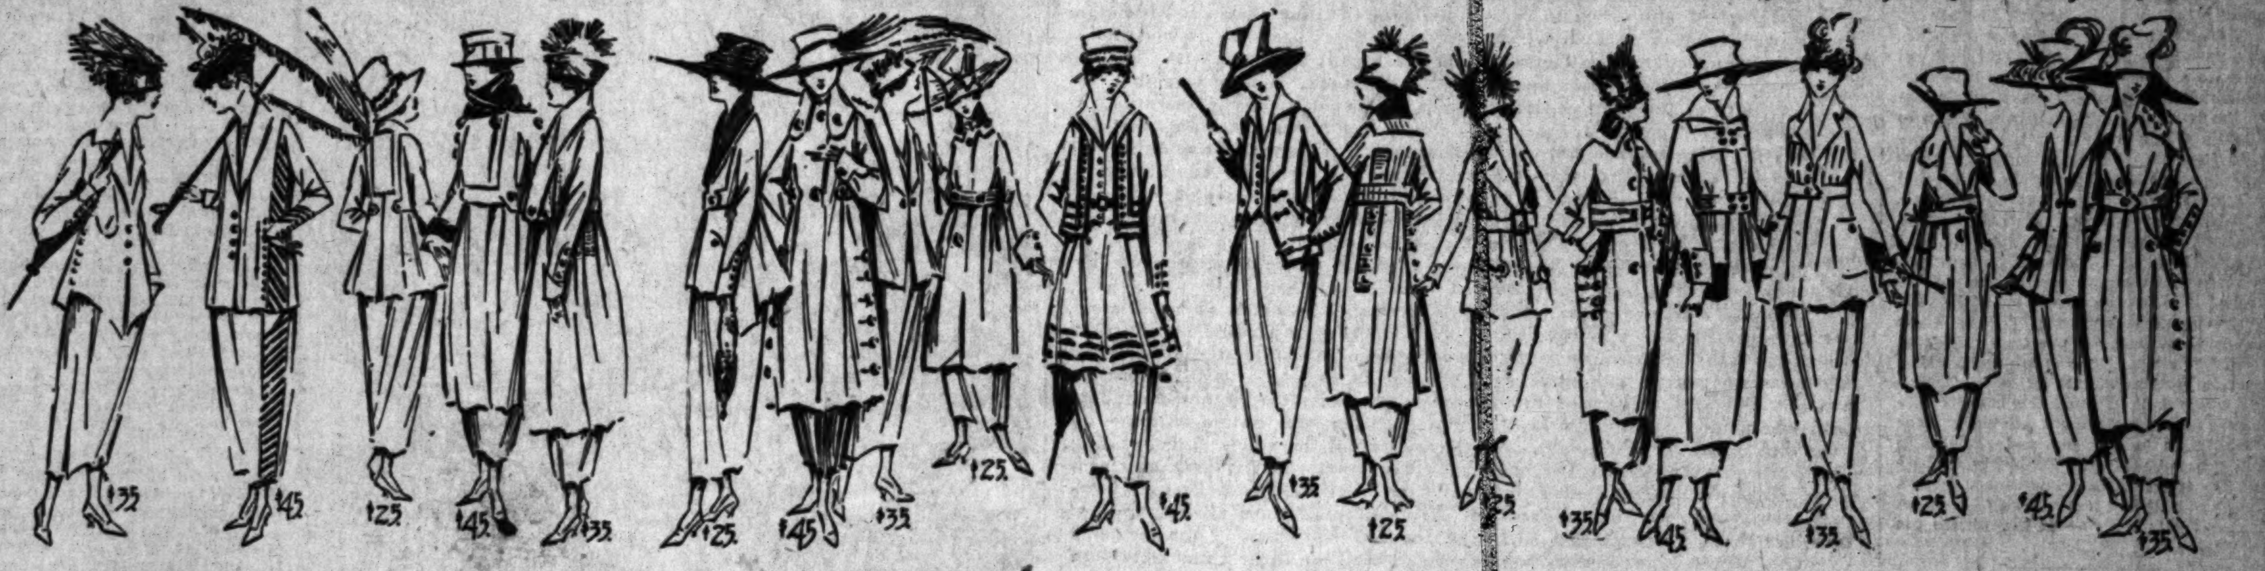
In these times when money-saving is a necessity as well as a virtue; when you are saving for high purposes; when you know that extravagance means national danger—what a relief it is to know that those who supply your apparel needs are guarding your interests as carefully as you yourself would.

That is exactly the Ville's position. We have made low price as important a feature as style this season. The Ville's sales-policy is an anchor to windward for you since it is protection and assistance to you in the popular practice of thrift.

Springtime Is Always Ville-time for Fashions

The wonderful modes in this after Fashion Show display place a newer strength in the Ville's statements of better styles at lesser prices.

So Many, Many Wonderful New Garments at $25, $35, $45



Such Clever Suit Modes at $25.00

Every suit that you will find here is here only because it has already been subjected to the most rigid scrutiny from the standpoints of style and quality. Thus when you buy a Ville suit for $25.00 you may know that your $25.00 is buying the utmost possible.

For instance, there are serges, tweeds, wool jerseys and gabardines in exceedingly clever semi-tailored and fancy street modes; as well as belted sports models in almost unlimited variety.

High shade jersey suits at $25.00 for country club and other sports wear.

Three out of the dozens of suits at $25.00 are pictured.

The Suits at $35.00

are unexcelled at their popular price

Black and white checks—gabardines—serges—mixtures and wool jerseys.

And just read this spring color list—white, black, navy, beige, grays, tans, khaki—hardly a really desirable shade not to be had.

Many with vests—some braid trimmed—sports and street styles as well as more plainly tailored suits in larger sizes.

—and $45 Buys Suits

like we've never had to sell at that mark

Suits that are the very pinnacle of fashion.

Poiret twills, serges, and fine weave gabardines in the best shades of the spring season.

Unique, dashing styles that have vestees of silk, pique or fine serge. Many attractively braided, while others show equally smart style features that one must see to appreciate. Three at $45.00 are illustrated.

Coats of Surprising Value at $25.00

One need only to make the most cursory inspection of our new $25.00 coats to realize that here is value—value—value—in the highest degree.

To buy such remarkably good looking models at $25.00 seems almost impossible, yet hundreds of Los Angeles folk have made the Ville's third floor their garment headquarters for the very reason that their money does buy so much.

Velours and gabardines in navy, Copenhagen, tan, green and a splendid variety of high colors.

Mostly all coats are belted. Made with large collars that button close to throat or which may be as attractively worn open.

Handsome Coats

at $35.00 the equal of many priced more

And your own comparisons of value will bear this out.

Velour, gabardine and Poiret twill coats in the exceedingly popular high shades and in the less colorful, but equally desirable navy, green, tan, and beige colors.

The styles are legion—a few are illustrated to give you a hint—but you must see the coats themselves to gain the perfect idea.

Each Coat at $45

is a revelation for fashion and quality

Velours, of course, because velour is one of the most popular of today's coatings—and gabardines, too, and Poiret twills, and silvertone suede, and Bolivia.

When you try on one of these handsome models and note the beautiful gracefulness of the lines, you will then appreciate the fact that these really are revelations for Springtime fashion and splendid quality. Many exclusive models.

Some full-lined and others half-lined.

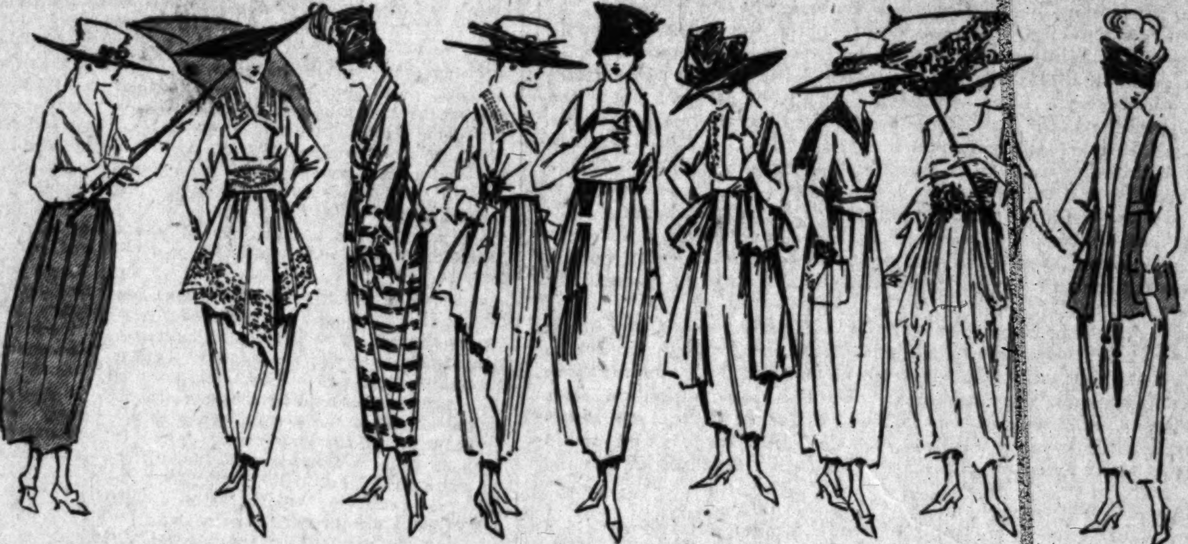
Wonder of Wonders!

Real Baronette Satin Skirts at $14.50

We are very sure that Baronette skirts of this quality have not been shown elsewhere at this exceptionally low price. Each one of these skirts made to our special order from silks of our own selection—made with such verve and dash of fashion as befits skirts only of much higher price.

Shown in plain color Baronette of white, electric blue, Copenhagen, rose, silver and tan.

Patch or insert pockets. Wide girdle of Baronette trimmed with pearl buttons.



The Sport Novelty Supreme

Sleeveless Coats of Costume Velvet at $25.00

Can one imagine a smarter, more cleverly designed sports jacket than one of these unique sleeveless affairs of costume velvet? They seem to be constantly reminding one that spring is an out-of-door season and that their place is on the tennis court or links. One can't stay indoors if one possesses such a sprightly jacket.

Made of excellent material in black, navy, turquoise, amber, taupe, brown, green, purple and rose.

Some have belts and others sashes. All lined with white silk.

Dozens of the Prettiest Dresses Imaginable are priced only $28.00

These dresses are the very embodiment of the word "dainty." Such alluring frocks make the pencil's point fairly thrill with excitement in describing them, yet there are not half enough synonyms for "charming" to go 'round if we set out to write of each one.

See the exceedingly smart, rustling taffetas with wool and metallic embroidery—see the taffetas with Georgette sleeves and collars—see the taffetas with embroidered organdie collar—see those bewitching frocks of Georgette and taffeta—see them all—every one—and after you've seen them place your own valuation upon them — you can't help saying: "More than $28.00!"

You will find every color of the rainbow—and combinations of special prettiness. Tunics are noticeable on almost every dress. Some embroidered—others beaded, and the jerseys are especially novel with their knitted collars and cuffs of contrasting shade.

GETTING EVEN.
We rise to a defense of Jonah. He was not a bad sort. In fact, he had always been a good citizen and a friend of the poor; but because he balked at going on a political mission to a bum town the Progressive machine hired a gang of pirates to pitch him from the hurricane deck and compel him to swallow a whale—or was it the other way round? It was a mean trick and Jonah knew it, and he made it so hot for the whale that the latter spewed him out at Long Beach, in which city, for his own safety, he feigned repentance and delivered the message with which he had been entrusted. However, ever since that time the sons of the prophet have had it in for the whale and at last the time has come to get even. Today whale steak is being sold in great quantities at the butcher shops. It is cheap meat and is almost as good as mutton or veal. Take a whale steak half an inch thick, drop it in boiling water for a minute, adding a pinch of soda, then take it out and place it in a hot, greased pan, sear it quickly on both sides, fry it for three minutes, add butter, pepper and salt and you have a dish fit for a king. Verily the sins of the whales are visited upon their children.

TROTZKY'S MILLION.
Petrograd cablegrams have it that Leon Trotzky's brand of diplomacy is too crude even for the Russian Soviet and that he has been told by the Bolsheviki to trotzky away back and sit down while a new Foreign Minister is to continue the peace parleys with the insatiate Huns. Trotzky has fared much better, however, than Kerensky and most of the other Russian radicals. Less than a year ago he was returned to Russia from New York at government expense.

During the three months that Trotzky has been at the head of the Bolsheviki he is reported to have amassed a fortune of a million dollars, the whole of which is safely invested in neutral countries. Considering his short apprenticeship he proved an apt pupil of the diplomacy of the German school. By birth he is a German. He adopted the name Trotzky by reason of its Russian flavor. Kerensky gave his all for Russia and fled stripped of everything but honor. Trotzky traded his honor and that of his adopted country for a cash consideration and retires a millionaire.

LLOYD GEORGE'S TRIUMPH.
King George reigns, but Lloyd George rules in Great Britain while the war is in progress. The latest attempt to unseat the intrepid Welshman has resulted in a triumph for him as complete as the discomfiture of his political, racial and personal enemies. When his policy favoring a central military staff for unity of action among the Allies was challenged he faced his detractors on the floor of the House of Commons and dared them to appeal to the British public from his decision. It would have been possible for them to force a general election; but those who were bitterest in their opposition felt that the spirit in Great Britain in favor of unity was such that Lloyd George would be overwhelmingly sustained. The British Premier has been strengthened by the confusion of his opponents, and Great Britain is prepared to go forward to a spring offensive on the western front with greater unity of force and purpose.

ANSWERING THE CALL.
Had you imagined that deaf people are only objects of charity? If so, you are wrong, especially concerning the deaf women of Los Angeles, who are more to be praised than pitied. These women now compose one of the most efficient Red Cross auxiliaries in this city, meeting twice a week in the Mason Building, where they prepare surgical dressings for our defenders "over there." They are also taking lessons in lip reading in order to teach the young men who, after the war, may be in need of their instructions. Verily, there are none so deaf as they who do not hear their country's call to service.

NOT ENOUGH.
There is much speculation over the fact that there are thousands of trained soldiers at the various cantonments, and an idea is abroad that they ought to be sent overseas. The trouble is the country is not provided with enough ships to carry them across the Atlantic. The bulk of the shipping is utilized to send food to the soldiers already over there. Americans as well as Allies.

BETTER.
President Wilson congratulates the country that there are but few labor strikes in progress in this country, and the effect of these is negligible. When matters were at their worst in the labor world there were ten thousand men affected by the labor disturbances while there were millions who remained loyally in line. The spectacle is most heartening.

MOONEY.
The Times has no fear that the Governor will slop over in the case of Dynamiter Mooney. Gov. Stephens has shown where he stands on the question of the right to dynamite.

THE STAND OF UNCLE SAM.

WHEN President Wilson issued his famous message, convoking Congress in special session for the purpose of declaring that a state of war existed between the United States and Germany, he nobly said:

> "There is one choice we cannot make, we are incapable of making. We will not choose the path of submission and suffer the most sacred rights of our nation and our people to be ignored or violated. The wrongs against which we now array ourselves are no common wrongs; they cut to the very roots of human life."

Ten months have passed since that notable sentiment was uttered. Not one of the wrongs against which the United States declared open warfare has been righted; without a word in palliation of unspeakable crimes, the German aggressor, through his Imperial Chancellor, Von Hertling, now asks for a conference of the warring nations to discuss a general peace.

It was not without great provocation that the American republic became a partner with other democracies in the present war. The safety of democratic government itself was seriously threatened; Germany sought to convert the open sea into a German lake and to annex the little nations of Europe as tributary provinces. International law was abolished by a German decree. Liberty and justice seemed on the point of departing from the earth. For the tenet of Christian civilization, "God is love," Germany substituted her materialist decree, "God is might." The war which engulfed seven-eighths of the world was a German-made war; and the peace the Kaiser is now seeking is a German-made peace. What shall be the answer of the American people?

II.

COUNT VON HERTLING is a finished sophist. He professed to accept each of the four fundamentals which President Wilson advanced as the principles on which peace shall be based; but there is an equivocation in his interpretation of each which practically devitalizes it. In his recent Reichstag peace speech the German Chancellor said:

> "The first principle enunciated by President Wilson says that each part of the final settlement must be based upon the essential justice of that particular case, and upon such adjustments as are most likely to bring a peace that will be permanent. Who would contradict this? The phrase coined by the great father of the church, Augustine, 1500 years ago—'Justitia, fundamentum regnorum'—is still valid today. Certain it is that only the peace based in all its parts on the principles of justice has a prospect of endurance."

That explanation sets forth clearly why the peace treaties made by Germany in the past have been so short-lived.

But the supreme effrontery of the German Chancellor is his feigned surprise that President Wilson should be "laboring under the illusion that there exists in Germany an antagonism between an autocratic government and a mass of people without rights." He says in reply that "with us, princes are the highest members of the nation as a whole, the highest members with whom the final decision lies. . . . But they also, as the supreme organs, belong to the whole, and only the welfare of the whole is the guiding line for a decision to be taken." He thinks that this explanation clears away all possible misunderstandings and concludes: "It may be useful expressly to point this out to President Wilson's countrymen." Perhaps, he imagines that an enlightened American republic will discover the elements of democracy in a government where princes are "the highest members with whom the final decision lies."

III.

PRESIDENT WILSON and the American people give an entirely different interpretation to the four peace fundamentals. When the President said that peoples should not be bartered about from sovereignty to sovereignty, he had in mind the combined force and intrigue by which Germany holds Alsace-Lorraine today, by which Austria continues to dominate and enslave Hungary, and by which Turkey is depopulating Armenia and Arabia. The American people have approved the declaration of their President that Alsace-Lorraine must be returned to France and that the fragments of the former Polish nation must be reassembled. Alsace-Lorraine is a symbol of a great wrong perpetrated by an autocratic government on a free people. If that wrong is righted it will signal the breaking up of autocratic power in Europe.

Justice, in each particular case presented to a council of nations, would establish a free Poland and restore Alsace-Lorraine to France.

When President Wilson declared that all well-defined national aspirations must be accorded the utmost satisfaction that can be accorded them, he indicated clearly that Armenia must be relieved of the crushing yoke of Turkish oppression; that each distinct people in the Austro-Hungarian monarchy should be permitted to form its own government; and that the Poles shall have an opportunity to form a new republic within the boundaries of what was once the Polish Empire.

Briefly, Von Hertling has proved himself to be an adroit verbal fencer, a cunning coiner of phrases. But the time when such diplomacy could prevail is numbered with the vanished eras to which he adroitly refers. The time when a phrase-maker could negotiate a peace is forever past. Words at best take on a ghastly pallor before the torrents of blood that have already been shed to make the world safe for decency. Germany's actions must square with her professions before peace can be seriously considered.

Germany has discovered to her discomfiture that the American people are solidly supporting their government; she has learned that there is something higher than dollar diplomacy to be regarded when dealing with America. The American people have offered their pearl of greatest price, the young manhood of the nation, as a sacrifice on the altar of liberty because they believe that German militarism is a menace to the peace of the whole world. When such armed bandits are permitted to ravage the land and the seas, security for life and for property ceases to exist. A triumphant Germany symbolizes successful banditry and piracy. Either the German military caste must fall or civilization must fall. The American people are not so blind that they cannot see that Germany must be made to give up her deadly weapons for land or sea, or every other nation must go perpetually armed.

Finally, the American people believe that the little nations of Europe and Asia have earned their right to a place in the sun. They agree with their President that this country does not desire to mark the boundary lines of the European countries, does not seek to enter European politics. But they further agree that they must join in the defense of democracy whenever and wherever it is unjustly assailed, that they must form a partnership with the Allies to make a second outbreak of German vandalism impossible.

IV.

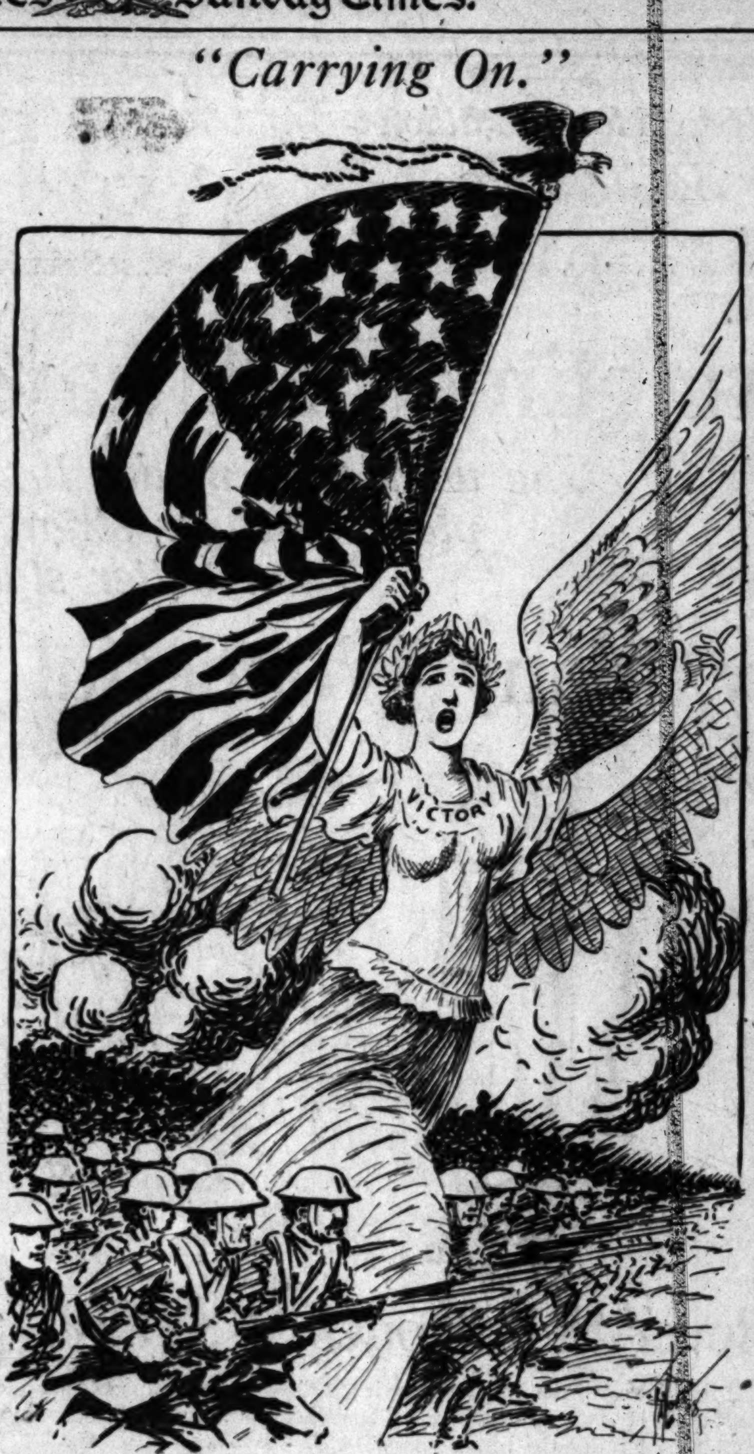
AMERICA would welcome a return of world peace; but it must be a democratic peace, one that does not bear the stamp "made in Germany." The United States is not actuated by a racial hate of the German people; it seeks neither extended boundaries nor a monetary indemnity for the billions already expended; it does not desire to see the middle classes and the laboring classes of Germany impoverished by a taxation which will make life a misery during the next three generations. But the United States demands that the government which forced us to unsheathe the sword of liberty and safety shall no longer be permitted to act in the name of the German people. The contract that binds Germany to keep the peace will not be accepted bearing a Hohenzollern signature.

Until these conditions are secured the United States will fight on. No matter if other countries follow the shameful course of Russia, the United States will demand that the world shall be made secure for democracy in fact as well as in name—a "fit and safe world to live in."

Count von Hertling intimates very clearly that neither the Kaiser nor his associates in crime are ready to abdicate. If they will yield only to force, then they must be made to feel that force. And the German people must be made to know that so long as they form an association with their despicable rulers, they, too, must feel the sword of justice. The United States has enlisted for the period of the war. Verbal acceptance of peace fundamentals on the part of the German Chancellor will not cause a moment's relaxation in our preparations to send 5,000,000 armed men along the road where American women and children were foully murdered by pirates hidden in German submarines. The American people desire peace; but a great majority of them are convinced that to secure the peace they so eagerly desire they must fight for it and they do not hesitate to meet any test of arms German autocracy may propose. They recognize that a necessary war is a just war, and having once enlisted they are prepared to go to the end of the trail. Such is the stand of Uncle Sam; it is the stand of a united American people.

Fair words are on the German Chancellor's lips; but his hands are stained with innocent blood; his purse is filled with stolen coin; his passions are satiated with rape and license; and his heart is as black as the dungeons of Tiberius. If Democracy is to sup with him and his master, it must indeed provide itself with a long spoon.

"Carrying On."



HERBERT C. HOOVER, AMERICAN.
Mr. Herman Goode, the official go-between for the British Ministry and the American Food Administration, gave out some illuminating figures in an address lately delivered to the British Rotary Clubs in London. By voluntary acts of abnegation the American people have provided 150,000,000 pounds of bacon, 25,000,000 pounds of fresh meat and thousands of tons of frozen meat for the use of the Allies in excess of the original estimate made by Mr. Hoover when he undertook the arduous duties of food controller.

That these supplies have not been immediately available for the British, French and Italian peoples is due to the tie-up of railroad traffic and the car congestion for which Mr. Hoover and the nation behind him are in no way responsible. Mr. Goode finished his address with the following graceful and by no means overstated tribute to his countrymen: "It is lucky for us that a man like Mr. Hoover is at the helm of the Allied food supply and that behind him is a people willing to deny themselves so that democracy may live to fight."

Seeing that Great Britain now relies on America for 65 per cent. of her food—that without this food she would be as hopelessly out of the fight as Belgium or Serbia—the dependence of the Allied cause on Mr. Hoover's miraculous executive ability and the no less wonderful spirit displayed by the average American civilian becomes one of the greatest outstanding features in the exhaustive struggle with the Prussian overlord.

The way in which the United States has tackled the paramount problem of food supply speaks equally well for the determination of this people to make every sacrifice requested in the cause of humanity and for the confidence inspired by the man who is asking of them these sacrifices. Indeed every detail of Hoover's career, from his birth on an Iowa farm, through his college days at Stanford University, during his wanderings through the wildest parts of the earth, in the handling of his extensive mining deals, in the lead he took during the dark days of the Boxer rebellion in China, up to the present time when he has established himself as one of the greatest leaders in the world war, demonstrate the truth of Mr. Goode's tribute that it is lucky for the foes of militarism that this typical American is today directing the food supplies of the Allied nations.

For surely if versatility is the hall mark of American genius Herbert Hoover is the typical representative American of the twentieth century.

Probably no name today is so often on the lips of the whole of our people as that of the famous Food Controller. Indeed he has furnished a new verb for the English language. Yet probably, too, few know the many big things he achieved before he attained his present world prominence. The story of how he crossed the great Gobi desert in a ceaseless conflict with savage nature and no less savage humanity has never been adequately told. Yet the telling would make a second Iliad.

Few people are aware that it was through the efforts of this same virile American that a great iron industry was developed in the Alps of Switzerland. His travels include such widely-scattered regions as Australia, China, Peru, Mexico and Burma. At Tien-tsin, in the days of the Boxer rebellion, he marshalled the white people against the fanatic hordes and by his courage and ability prevented one of the bloodiest massacres in China. The "giant American" is still mentioned with respect and admiration by the inhabitants of that far-off city.

His executive ability was recognized in his own circle long before his handling of the Belgian relief made his name a household word in all civilized lands. Said one of his business associates: "He works twenty-six hours a day and never turns a hair; he manages a dozen things at once and yet leaves the impression on the observer that he is doing nothing at all." And again: "He handles his great Russian iron mines, with their seven thousand employees, with the little finger of his left hand."

Even more striking than his capacity for never ceasing labor is the strict and undeviating integrity that has marked the smallest no less than the largest of his multifarious business transactions. After he established mining headquarters in London his advice was sought by every class of investors and not one man or woman ever lost a penny by following his counsel. In fact a mining investment guaranteed by Herbert C. Hoover was known to be as safe as the Bank of England.

All the attributes that go into the making of a leader of men are to be found in this typical production of American soil and American institutions. Constructive ability, high standards of integrity and honor, broad imagination, keen humor, love of adventure, audacity in operation and, above all, a physical and mental capacity for hard and unremitting labor. California has especial reason for taking pride in this great American champion of the cause of democracy. For if Herbert Hoover was a native son of Iowa, he received his training and education—and chose his wife—and started his famous career on the Pacific Coast.

RIPPLING RHYMES.

THE CONTRAST.

Some man is freezing in a trench, while I sit by the fire and tune up with a monkey wrench my bargain counter lyre. The fire is warm, the room is bright, and easy is my chair; and someone in the bitter night is freezing in despair. Some soldier, far from home and friends, toils on through snow and ice; and he my cozy home defends, at what a ghastly price! Of course that soldier must be fed, but do not ask, I beg, that I shall cut out wheaten bread, my steak or morning egg. With soldiers brave I sympathize, I weep for all their woes; but I can't do without my pies, my roasts and things like those. I go to bed at 10 o'clock and feel no cold or storm; the midnight blast the house may rock, but I am snug and warm. Some soldier, on a windswept moor, this night is stricken low; that I may rest in bed secure, he's bleeding in the snow. He's wounded, dying, in the night, no loving voice he hears; I'm truly sorry for his plight, I'll shed nine kinds of tears. But do not ask me, I beseech, to help the Red Cross cause; I'll gladly shudder, weep and preach, spring maxims and wise saws; but when you ask me for a plunk, why, that's another tale; I'm free with words and kindred junk, but cannot spare the kale. WALT MASON.

With women boosting the income tax campaign and taking a part in a dozen activities growing out of the war it may in truth be said that women's work is never done.

I GUESS SO.

BY CHARLES F. DUMMIS.

Literature is lou—lou—(why, yes, now I recall the spelling)—Literature is Loud with "Lovely Ladies that We have Known." There—in Literature.

Poor Papa Adam was the first man (and one of the last) that ever told the truth about 'em. He knew the first woman, and unquestionably the best. Easy, now! My hair offers no inducements to the most prehensile fingers. And epithets won't make it grow. "Sassy"? Say, WHO is Sassy? Was Eve the Best Ever? Will you kindly ingratiate your Remembery to recall any other Lady that God took the pains to make all by Himself and personally ushered into (and out of) the Garden of Eden, or anywhere else?

It grieves me to observe a modern disposition to plant the grave of our Grandedest Dad with thistle remarks—even to accusing him of "hiding behind a woman's skirts."

"Blasphemy" is an abused word. It isn't generally "blasphemy" for a man to swear a cerulean streak. He doesn't mean it. It's just a familiar shibboleth as void of sinful intention as when a lady says "Oh, Dear!" or "Oh, My!" She doesn't realize that she is saying "Oh, God!" (Dieu,) or "Oh, My God!" Nor does the man really mean it when he says "God Damn my Eyes!" All these expletives (and women have as many as men, but don't know their etymology) are not Sins. They are simply Damfoolishness, a sign of Mental Poverty, a Slacking from the Best Tool in the world—Language.

But what really IS Blasphemous is the smug mental attitude which unconsciously but inevitably ranks God as a senile Has-Been; doddering now, and "never very Bright, anyhow." And that is more endemic with us than we realize. Under catechism we should of course admit that God is Smarter than We are—but we Don't Believe it for a minute!

Take back to Pop Adam. WHAT skirts did he "hide behind"? Anybody's but Eve's? And you recall her skirts! But did you ever think why Eve was the only woman who was never afraid of a mouse?

And—please have this Guest register in your Attic—Adam said it straight to the face of the Almighty. And note that Jehovah never did dispute him nor call him a Slacker. Note also that the Lady laid it to the snake. I never did know the first nineteen verses of the third chapter of Genesis to be much quoted by the Ladies. They are really worth reading, even yet. The Verses. Mebbe also the Ladies.

I am neither cynic nor pessimist. Either is a fool. So are all of us—but we can Choose not to be of that special and dyspeptic kind. My creed may be partly guessed from my own lines:

A Pessim-Optimist am I—
Content nor discontented never,
Undrugged of Ease, of Fear unfettered,
No thing on earth but has need to TRY—
No thing and nowhere and no-so-ever!
Nothing so vague that we cannot letter it,
Nothing so bad that it can't be bettered,
Nothing so good that we oughtn't to better it!

As I look back to my youthful friendship for the most beautiful, adorable and only Perfect Women that ever lived, it hurts me in my once-impressionable heart to realize that they are All Dead! Eve and Sarah and Hagar and Ruth; Pharaoh's daughter on the bank, and little Moses in the pool; Sappho (before the Films,) and Aspasia and Helen of Troy; and staunch Penelope; Dido and Cleopatra; Petrarch's Laura and Abelard's Heloise; Many of the Scots and Johnnie Dark, Marie Antoinette, "Good" Queen Bess, Martha and the Magdalen, Martha Washington and Nancy Hanks (whom the Century Dictionary of Proper Names knows as "a fast American trotting mare," but not as Mamma to Abraham Lincoln;) and Cornelia of the Jewels, and Mary Mother of the Christ—and her name is worn by more women today—good, bad and half-way women—than any other eight given names put together.

God has granted to me to know a large number of the very best specimens of the Species now Extant. For much more than half a century I have felt the benediction of the gentleness of good women; but it is only of late that I can understand why they find fault with me, and are therefore not as Perfect as their historic predecessors. Why, Lillith never even offered to spank me! Now I know why our woman friends are not so absolutely Pufflck. It's because they Aren't Dead Yet! The Queen of Sheba never burned your toast, nor did Dido wig your ear if you Sat Up with a Sick Friend. All these Former Ladies have the advantage of Perspective.

If we may rely on Scripture, God made woman as a Secondary Consideration. If you doubt me, look in a very respectable old book, where it says, "Genesis II," and read with intention verses 18 and 21-22.

Myself, I've always had a Reconciled Feeling that the Lord put Adam under ether ("a deep sleep") and took out one of his ribs and Bettered it—and Adam's sons have been worrying that bone ever since. That wonderful Mosaic editing of the folklore of the Israelites, the Semites, the Babylonians and three or four other peoples didn't mean to be Disrespectful by stating plainly that the Almighty had to think Twice. And it was merely for Man, whom He "made in His own Image" (doubtless you have noticed the Resemblance?)

Me, the longer I know women (or, rather, know that there Are Sich,) the less I wonder that it took God Two Guesses, and the more reconciled I am to that Subtracted Rib. I talk unorthodox; but I am one of the few who Honestly Believe God Knew His Business!

RIPS THE FOLIAGE FROM HEARST CAMOUFLAGE.

Pasadena Banker Brands the Effort to "Square Things" with Canadians as a Fabric of Falsity.

THE TIMES has received copies of the following correspondence between M. F. Ihmsen, publisher of William Randolph Hearst's Los Angeles Examiner, and James Macdonnell, vice-president and cashier of the First National Bank of Pasadena:

PASADENA (Cal.) March 1, 1918.

Los Angeles Examiner,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen:

I have your letter of February 28, beginning as follows: "A committee of Canadians has requested us to send to you an editorial page of the Examiner, recently published, which contains an editorial sentiment relative to Canadians and Americans that . . . this committee feels would be of interest to you," and your letter ends by stating that the ban on the Hearst papers and the International News Service has been lifted so far as England and all British dominions are concerned.

I believe that your letter begins and ends typically with a misstatement. No committee of Canadians requested you to send out your advertising matter. There are not enough renegades here to form a committee. As for your last statement, that your service has been restored and your paper admitted to loyal Canadian homes, the refutation comes in this morning's Associated Press as follows:

TORONTO (Ont.) Feb. 28.—(By Canadian Press.)—"There is no truth in the report that the ban has been lifted on the Hearst publications or the International News Service," said Col. Chambers, chief press censor for Canada, in reply to a question on this point. "I am aware of the fact that a report of this kind has been circulated, but there is not a word of truth in it. The regulations are still being rigidly enforced in Great Britain and Canada."

With regard to your editorial of February 7, enclosed, I have two observations to make. First, a Hearst paper would print anything once, even something loyal to America and her allies, for the sake of circulation, and it would be an egregious ass who would be taken in by such a simple stratagem. I presume you sent the German Ambassador many editorials with the same business end in view. Second, the article submitted by you as proof of your friendship for Canada is a good sample of the devious, mischief-attempting and lying propaganda that is the utmost you dare these days.

Believe me, you cannot curry favor with any true Canadian by attempting with ill-disguised venom to stick a wedge between that country and the mother land for which she has shown her willingness to die. Every Canadian is proud of the way in which the land of his birth has risen to its destiny, but he would be suspicious of your aid in shaping that destiny. Flattery from you, with the implication that their British connection is the only thing for which Canadians need apologize, is foolish and useless. Their loyalty to Britain is their overmastering sentiment. If your hatred of all things British did not make you purblind, the war would have taught you this much.

There is a certain animal not unknown in Los Angeles county whose presence is known not by sight but with the use of other senses, and only children of tender years mistake it for a pet. I would not want it or the Examiner, if I could help it, in my back yard.

If my views seem to you not representative, I would suggest that Mr. Hearst inform himself by stepping off a train either at Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver or any Canadian point and make his identity known. But preferably he might step off either in Berlin or anywhere in the United States while the train is moving, say, sixty miles an hour.

Yours truly,

[Signed] J. F. MACDONNELL.

LOS ANGELES EXAMINER,
The Great Newspaper of the Great Southwest.
William Randolph Hearst.
Office of the Publisher.

Feb. 28, 1918.

Mr. James Macdonnell,
San Rafael Heights,
Pasadena, Cal.

Dear Sir:

A committee of Canadians has requested us to send to you an editorial page of the Examiner, recently published. It contains an editorial sentiment relative to the Canadians and Americans and to Canada and the United States that this committee felt sure would be of interest to you.

Many false impressions were given by newspaper rivals of the Hearst papers throughout the country relative to the attitude of the Hearst papers toward Canadians and Canada. As a matter of fact, the Hearst papers have been conspicuous among the larger American publications in their appreciation of Canada, its vastness, its possibilities and the opportunities it offers, and its similarity in social, economic and political life to our own country. The Hearst papers for years advocated closer commercial and social relations between the two greatest countries of the western hemisphere.

The objection the Hearst papers made during the first year of the war to the British censorship, which the Hearst papers felt was unsafe from the standpoint of Great Britain's own interest, resulted in the closing of the cables to the International News Service, but this prohibition, after careful consideration by the British government, has been lifted, and the International News Service now has the full cable and postal privileges in England and all British dominions and commonwealths.

Yours very truly,

[Signed] M. F. IHMSEN.

HALF-CENTURY MEN GET HUNDRED RIFLES.

HOME GUARDS TO USE THEM IN DRILLS—UNIFORMS ARE DESIRED.

One hundred Springfield rifles have been provided for the Half Century Association Home Guards, through the generosity of five business men of this city. The rifles were received yesterday, and will be used in the next drill.

The association wishes to provide uniforms for the Home Guards as soon as possible, and the public will be asked to help this fund by patronizing a big entertainment to be given in Shrine Auditorium on the afternoon of April 7. Among those who will contribute their talents to the programme are Mme. Jorgina, a well-known eastern singer; Donatelli's Orchestra, and some of the best musical talent of this city.

The Los Angeles branch of the Half Century Association now numbers 1250 members. Nearly half that number are in the association at Long Beach. It is expected that an association will be formed in San Francisco shortly, and plans for a general organization campaign throughout the larger cities of the United States are being completed. A banquet is to be held at the Broadway Department Store cafe on the evening of the 15th inst., when it is expected these plans will be fully presented and financial arrangements provided for.

The association is placing in employment from five to ten men per day, and the woman's auxiliary has taken up the work of assisting cripples or those with some physical defect, so that they may be put in the way of making a living.

The Playground Commission has provided for the members of the association using the gymnasium at Normal Hill Center and the baths there on two nights a week. A physical instructor is provided. The Home Guards are also provided with a room at the Normal Hill Center to be used as an armory.

INCORPORATIONS.

FIGHT WAR TOGETHER, SAYS BRITISH EARL.

AMERICA AND ALLIES IN THE STRUGGLE FOR THE SAME IDEALS.

Addressing the City Club at noon yesterday, Alexander Edward Murray, eighth Earl of Dunmore, who carries two German bullets and a piece of a shell in his body, asserted that unquestionably the Allies will win the war, but warned against an attitude of relaxation. He paid high tribute to the loyalty and patriotism of America and the Sammies now on the battle front.

The Earl, who is a lieutenant-colonel, said the war is a battle between two big ideals—the selfish ideal of Germany and our spiritual ideal, in which all the Allies concur.

"We are in the war to save our ideals," he said. "We are fighting the most merciless power in the world. You entered this war for the same reason that we did, because you are an honorable people. We are going to see this war through together. We have got to fight it out, no matter what the cost may be."

The distinguished officer said the English casualties last year amounted to 1,000,000 officers and men, yet today the English army is stronger than ever before.

Lieut.-Col. Lord Dunmore was introduced by Arthur Letts, who proposed the following toast:

"To the health of a brave soldier who has been wounded and now carries shells in his body received while fighting our battles."

The audience arose and greeted the visitor with prolonged applause.

STREET PAVING COST SOARS IN TWO YEARS.

The price of street paving material is soaring. In April, 1916, a contractor offered to improve Oregon street from Ezra street to Euclid avenue for $3639. He failed to do the work and the Board of Public Works recently re-advertised for bids. Yesterday it announced that the lowest bid for the same job was $5104 and requested the Council to award the contract.

UNCLE SAM'S CAMP CLEANING LEAVES MANY WITHOUT FLAG.

Blood-Relationship Test Causes Discharge of Thousands from Army—Some at Kearny Leave with Tears in Their Eyes—"Let's Go to Berlin!" is Cry.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CAMP KEARNY, March 2.—With the putting into operation of "housecleaning" in a score or so of army camps and cantonments throughout the United States, a peculiar condition has arisen which probably was not anticipated by the army authorities. The housecleaning makes it a case with the men of being a German or not a German, and is largely due to the fact that you can't always read what is really in a man's mind.

No sadder history has been written than that which tells of the mental agony of the "man without a country." Without warning, several thousand men were called before army authorities in army camps in the United States during the present week and after a series of questions were given discharges from the service. Even army authorities admitted that in many cases men wanted to prove their loyalty, or appeared to want to do so. But this is a war to the death; it is a war where no possible angle can be neglected; the government cannot afford to take any chances. At Camp Kearny many of these men actually left the army with tears in their eyes. But it was not a case of one man or ten, but of a racial condition that could not be obliterated.

Truly, it was a housecleaning. The sheep had to go with the goats; the thorns with the leaves, and the thistles with the blossoms. There was no exception. And it all revolves around one little condition which is applicable to all mankind. This condition is that of blood relationship. A man who has German blood in his veins might stand bravely for American principles as enunciated by the President and at the last minute might switch to the side of blood relatives, distant or immediate.

The insidious spy system of the Kaiser has wrought such havoc in America that one is prone to think of all persons of German blood as natural spies. The army figures that that is the best way to figure. You can't go wrong on two and two, but you might miss out in higher mathematics.

More than a hundred men of German blood were discharged against their will from the army at Camp Kearny this week. Not all of these men had pro-German leanings and opinions. Some of them did have, and are awaiting action by the government regarding their confinement in a German internment camp.

The Sammies here have short shrift for Germans of the dyed-in-the-wool type. A man who expresses sentiments in favor of Germany in the hearing of his bunkies might just as well give up the ghost, for life will be made miserable for him. That applies to all nationalities. One man of German parents found the strain too much for him. He broke away from his companions and later was seen weeping bitterly in a dark corner of a company street. He said he wanted to prove his loyalty to the United States.

One man, an Austrian, said to have blood relationship to the Austrian nobility, was a student in the University of California. He said that if he were put out of the army, he would forever be ostracized from the fellows he had known for years, largely because he would be stamped with the mark of a "man without a country."

Many of the men pleaded not to be discharged and declared that they would do anything to prove their loyalty. These men, say some army authorities, are in an unfortunate position. They are neither here nor there. No end of argument would be sufficient to show that they actually would prove true blue under the trying circumstance of firing ball cartridges at some relation in the German trenches.

The treatment of those men on the part of army officers is mostly sympathetic and not one of antagonism. But, it was said, their services still can be of great avail to America in winning the war. This is not a war of merely men in arms; industries have to fight, and fiercely. Potatoes have to be dug. Let them dig, is the saying.

It Doesn't Pay to Be a German at Camp Kearny.

Bayonet practice on imaginary Germans.

LOOKING ON AT CAMP KEARNY.

LIEUT.-COL. RICE W. MEANS of the Colorado regiment and the orator of the Fortieth Division has been made head of the school of specialists, such as instruction in automatic rifle work, bayonet movements and the half-dozen other things being taught there.

Every Man Insured.

Capt. Herb Simon, who was in command of Co. E when that organization left Santa Monica, is now in command of Co. I, the Pasadena unit. His company is insured for $1,950,000, including every man. On the last day the captain talked eighty men into the insurance idea.

Capt. Simon has the distinction of growing the first red rose in camp. When he arrived there, one of the first, he passed over a spot where his garden now is, and never thought anything but cactus and sagebrush would grow. This was on August 9. Now the old Seventh California has a rather attractive front yard with cement walks.

Assistant Y.M.C.A. Secretary.

N. F. Turner has been made assistant camp secretary for the Y.M.C.A., under J. R. Voris. Ralph Ainley, formerly at the recruit camp, is now assistant to H. E. Parminter, social and educational secretary.

Division Song Leader.

L. F. Peckham of the Y.M.C.A. is getting the voices of the men in shape to produce a lot of musical utterances when they land in France. He is song leader for the division. In every company or battery a song leader is being appointed, and those who can't sing will at least have to make some noise.

Both Sergeant and Father.

James G. Stevenson, formerly of Battery D, Utah regiment, has great cause for elation. He is now with the Military Police and was promoted Thursday to a sergeant. The same day he got word that he is father of a baby girl of eight pounds.

"Hug-me-Tights."

The American Red Cross is passing out "hug-me-tight" sweaters to all the men in camp. E. W. Martin is busy seeing that every one gets one.

Manages Ball Team.

Sergt. J. L. Hoag, a Chico lad. will be unable to keep his contract with the Butte club of the Northwestern League, for he is now the manager for the ball team of the One Hundred and Fifty-ninth Infantry. Hoag was with Spokane in 1913. Lieut. J. W. Rollins is coach of the team.

Measles a Setback.

Measles interfered with the training for an officer of Sergt. Earl Crabbe, Crabbe, well-known athlete. He said it was the third time he had 'em, and this time it put him back so far he was unable to catch up with the others. He is now back in the office of Athletic Director John R. Case.

A Digging Company.

Co. L, One Hundred and Fifty-ninth Infantry, is a digging bunch. The men dug three graves near the trenches, and marked them "Cook," "K. P," and "At Ease."

HARBOR TO VOTE ON ROAD BOND ISSUE.

PROJECT WILL CUT DISTANCE TO REDONDO BEACH BY SIX MILES.

Voters in the harbor district will have an opportunity on Tuesday, March 12, to vote on the proposed bond issue of $160,000 to improve a new road that will cut the distance between San Pedro and Redondo Beach from seventeen to eleven miles. It will also place San Pedro and Wilmington seven miles nearer Hollywood by a connection with Western avenue at Lomita.

The bonds will be voted upon under the act providing for municipal improvement districts. The new road district will be called municipal improvement district No. 7. Hollywood recently voted bonds under this act for the purchase of the Hollywood water plant, and the bond buyers, after holding up the sale of the bonds until passed upon by the Supreme Court, have finally approved them.

The contention settled by the court was whether property in a district organized under this act could be included in another district and bonded again. The decision of the court relieved considerable apprehension in the harbor district, where it is planned to vote bonds for a playground site and other improvements. Some of the taxpayers who expressed doubt as to the advisability of voting the road bonds until this was settled, are now enthusiastic boosters for the proposed road.

To Reclaim 600,000 Acres.

The knowledge that the United States Reclamation Service will be engaged during the remainder of the war in planning homes for returning soldiers is the oustanding development of the conference which ended a few days ago.

The new preparedness for peace plan has a special interest for Colorado in that the plans involve some enormous work to be undertaken in this State if Congress sanctions the plan. Chief of the work to be studied in Colorado is the proposed drainage of 600,000 acres of the San Luis Valley, a great domain capable of raising crops, but now swampy and unproductive.

Some San Luis Valley interests have long fought the reclamation service on account of the restrictions placed by the government on the use of the waters of the Rio Grande River. Those restrictions, it is stated, were made by the State Department long before Congress created the reclamation service, and embodied them in a treaty with Mexico. The reclamation service carried out government instructions in conserving those waters for the use of proprietors far down the stream.

When the valley shall have been drained it is probable that this ancient source of friction will be removed, as the more exact knowledge of the land and of the available water may enable the government to make a distribution of the water more satisfactorily to the residents of the San Luis Valley.—[Rocky Mountain News.

Thousands Cheer Boy Scouts as They March in Review.

Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday.

THREE-DAY DRIVE IS TO RAISE BOY-SCOUT FUND.

This City Asked for Sixty Thousand Dollars for the Lads Who are Helping to Win War.

Juvenile delinquency is everywhere causing the school and court authorities great concern. This same problem has been developed by the war in every other belligerent country. The boy is left a great deal on his own resources. He has the chance of increasingly earning and spending his own money. All this leads to juvenile delinquency. Statements have been made that this evil has increased in this country in degrees varying from 25 to 60 per cent. during the past eight months."

Boy Scouts are given the opportunity of occupying their time in useful crafts. Scouting means outdoor life. This implies a practical education. A boy before he can become a scout must promise at all times to keep himself in readiness to render public service. It is demanded of him that he be loyal, courteous and trustworthy. He can attain many of the attributes of a true Scout for himself, but for others he needs leadership.

Several months ago Scout William Donohugh, 15 years old and a member of Troop One of Hermosa Beach, saved the life of Herbert Dobson of Los Angeles. Dobson, while bathing in the ocean, was caught in a rip and was carried out to sea. Donohugh, hearing the man's cries for help, swam out after him and rescued him as he was sinking for the last time.

SAVED BY BOY SCOUT.

During the recent rains an elderly woman, crossing Spring street, slipped on the wet pavement and broke her ankle. She was unable to move and would have been crushed by the traffic had not the prompt attention of a Boy Scout saved her.

That Scouts are actively engaged in Red Cross work is attested by the fact that all of their number in Southern California are to enter into competition for a shield which is to be presented to the troop that passes the highest examination in first aid, nursing and other forms of Red Cross activity. The contest will close in April.

The $20,000-a-day campaign is to be launched by the Red Cross Campaign Committee of which Harry B. Haldeman is chairman. The teams are composed of business men. The city will be divided into districts which will be canvassed by teams captained by Stoddard Jess, R. H. Lacy, R. W. Burnham, W. J. Dodd, G. G. Greenwood, H. Jevne, F. E. McMullen, H. M. Brugwall, Earl Treist, J. M. Schneider, Edward R. Maier, L. V. Starr, Sylvester Weaver, A. G. Wells, H. W. O'Melveny, Roy Hillman, H. S. McKee, R. W. Pridham, W. Ross Campbell, J. A. H. Kerr, Harold Janss, Sollie Aronson, G. Griffith, J. B. T. Wagner and Orra E. Monnette.

THREE-YEAR BUDGET.

All the funds collected from the campaign will go into the organization's budget for the next three years. The various items include the administration, educational, war emergency camp, field and reserve funds.

"We are following what has been already done throughout the country," said D. W. Pollard, Scout executive for Los Angeles. "A number of other big cities are raising three-year budgets, due to the popularity of the Boy Scout movement. If we get sufficient money, we shall be enabled to train Scoutmasters, as President Wilson has requested. We shall also be able to care for all the boys that will come into the organization in our week-end training camps. If this money is forthcoming, we can increase four or five times the numbers of Scouts now in Los Angeles."

Considerable interest was evinced at the "Walk-Rite" campaign which the Scouts of this vicinity conducted in co-operation with the police on Friday and Saturday, and which will be continued tomorrow, thirteen street intersections in the heart of the city were under the direction of Boy Scouts, a total of fifty-two corners in all being covered. Arrows painted on the sidewalks pointed the proper direction for pedestrians to take, and printed signs gave other valuable instructions. "Keep to the right," was the watchword of the campaign. Ten thousand "safety first" pamphlets were distributed free of charge to pedestrians.

GIVEN DIPLOMAS.

Twenty-five scoutmasters were given diplomas last Thursday at the Normal Hill Center. Some weeks ago a class for the purpose of training men for leaders was organized with a total enrollment of eighty. Throughout the course there was an average attendance of sixty.

A new course will be started at Normal Hill Center about the middle of March. It will be divided into two parts, theory and practice. In addition to what he obtains from the lectures delivered by experts, each man will be required to teach and drill in marching a squad of men. The course is intended for busy men who contemplate doing boys' work, and who wish to be shown how they can most efficiently begin their efforts.

The most competent instructors, experts in their line, compose the faculty. Vance Veith, instructor of swimming at the Los Angeles Athletic Club, is scheduled to offer practical demonstrations in life-saving and resuscitation. Dr. H. W. Spiers, one of the city's leading Red Cross physicians, will instruct in first aid, and Dr. Irving R. Bancroft, head of the health and development department of the Los Angeles public schools, will lecture on personal and public health.

OUR HUMAN MATERIAL.

Sir William Baden-Powell of England, originator of the Boy Scout movement and a recognized military authority, was recently asked when the present world war would end.

"This war will be settled in 1935," he replied. He then enlarged upon this by stating that the conflict would not be brought to a close by probable revolutions or present battles, but rather that "we must think of this war and fight it in terms of the next generation."

"If it can be shown that as a nation we have conserved our human material," he said, "as represented by the boys and girls of this generation, we shall have demonstrated whether we have really won the war. The true victory will come to that nation which now protects its children so as to insure the quality of its men to carry on the work of that country after the war."

"FUNNY NOISES" FAIL TO SAVE HIM.

CONFESSED BURGLAR, WHO TELLS OF INJURY, SENTENCED TO PRISON.

Funny noises in the head, which made him irresponsible at times, did not save Carl J. Frizen from a prison sentence at the hands of Judge Willis.

"I was hit on the head when I was young," he told the court, "and since then I have frequent attacks of funny noises. When I get them I do not know what I am doing."

"Perhaps a little rest in the penitentiary will do you good," replied the court.

Frizen was adjudged guilty of second-degree burglary, following his confession, and given an indeterminate sentence of from one to five years at San Quentin.

Frizen and Bernard Tennis were arrested and charged with a number of burglaries committed last Thanksgiving Day. Frizen confessed to having entered several apartment-houses and also the nurses' home of the California Hospital, from which he secured a number of rings and a camera. He denied that Tennis accompanied him on any of his stealing expeditions.

Tennis is awaiting trial and Judge Willis made an order to hold Frizen here as a witness.

APPOINTMENTS CONFIRMED.

United States District Attorney Robert O'Connor yesterday received word that the appointments in his office, announced a few days ago, had been confirmed by Atty.-Gen. Gregory. They are W. Fleet Palmer, special assistant to the United States District Attorney; Clyde R. Moody, first assistant; Gordon Lawson, second assistant, and Lyndon Young, third assistant. They took the oath of office before the United States District Court clerk and qualified.

ON MANN ACT CHARGE.

Deputy United States Marshal Sidney J. Shannon of Fresno brought Bush Bellisime, a Frenchman, to this city yesterday and lodged him in the County Jail on a charge of violation of the Mann Act. Bellisime is accused of having taken Rita Caverzagie from a point in Nebraska to Jerome, Lincoln county, Idaho. An order for the removal of Bellisime to Boise, Idaho, for hearing and trial will be made tomorrow by the local Federal court.

Are You Being Cheated?

When a corporation or an individual buys at from $25 to $60 an acre a tract of raw land upon which nothing has ever been grown, spends a few thousand dollars in grading and road-building, and then asks you to pay $400, $500, $600 or even $750 an acre for it, on what do they base their land valuation?

As a matter of cold fact, do they care, after they get your good money, whether you sink or swim?

The answer to this question goes directly to the root of the biggest problem in California today! We have that answer—and so may you by reading our coming book—

"The Truth About California"

Don't fail to read this book! It will tell the story of how California has cheated you and cheated herself by permitting the activities of men who, working under the guise of legitimate "land developers," have enriched themselves at the expense of the unwary newcomer and brought disaster to countless homes! It will be a revealing picture—a graphic, human, acid-pointed story of greed and fraud!

This book will sell for 25c a copy throughout the United States. Send for your copy in advance of publication. Remember—send NO MONEY—merely your name and address—we will forward it C. O. D. when ready. Also send or call for our FREE pamphlet "How To Find The Truth About California." This should be read by every newcomer and prospective land investor in California. Free on request!

If you knew that right now in California operating a land-selling scheme was a man whom the U. S. Government had barred from another State, would you take his unsupported word as to the value of the land? The chances are—if you investigated this man's past and gave the matter mature thought—that you WOULD NOT! Yet it is a fact that already a considerable number of well-intentioned folk have blindly accepted his statements and parted with their cash.

Warned in advance, they might have saved their money and avoided grief!

We make land appraisements, soil analysis, supply information as to the crops you can raise AT A PROFIT, flood conditions, the loan value of property, and all the VITAL FACTS not within your reach.

We act for individuals, banks, title companies and estates in safeguarding their property investments.

March as to War.

LIKE ARMY IN MINIATURE IS BOY SCOUTS' PARADE.

Youthful Troops Reviewed by Notables at the City Hall.

HEADED by the Fort MacArthur band and reinforced with martial airs from the Whittier State School and the Submarine Base bands, together with three divisions of the Boy Scout fife and drum corps, 2000 Boy Scouts yesterday marched through the downtown streets. At the City Hall they were reviewed by the Earl of Dunmore, Maj. Manchester, Coast head of the Canadian recruiting mission, and Arthur Letts, president of the local Scout Council. The parade formed at Eighth and Hope streets at 11 o'clock and it was nearly an hour later when it passed the reviewing stand.

Boy Scout troops from all parts of this and the surrounding counties were in the line of march. New uniforms were in evidence and the boys resembled a miniature army. Some of the marchers carried banners that were trophies for the purpose of advertising the Red Cross, Red Star or war-savings stamps.

"A Boy Scout pledges himself to buy war savings stamps. Are you pledged?" was the slogan that appeared on several banners. Another banner informed the public that the Scouts are in need of Scout masters.

GUARD OF HONOR.

At the City Hall a guard of honor, composed of ten Scouts and Camp Director Harvey Cheeseman, surrounded the reviewing stand and was present to usher the notables from their automobile.

Lord Dunmore reviewed the parade enthusiastically. Previously he had said of the Scouts, "There is no other movement in the world that, in my opinion, means so much and will have so great an influence on the future of the Anglo-Saxon race as this Boy Scout organization. I served in South Africa with Sir Robert Baden-Powell and knew him well. When he conceived the idea and put it into effect I was heartily in favor of it as I saw at once just what its possibilities were.

"The work of getting the thing started was naturally difficult, but, once on the move, it gathered headway quickly and today, here and in England, the general public recognizes and appreciates the tremendous importance of the organization. The fundamental principles, the rules and regulations governing entry into the corps and subsequent conduct, the lessons in mental and physical strength and cleanliness, the stimulation of national spirit, the inculcation and development of honor, decency and manliness, all of these are combining to raise and keep raising the standards of the race.

VALUE TO THE RACE.

"That is why I emphasize my belief that there is nothing of more importance to the race than the organization and maintenance on its present high plane of the Boy Scouts. Further, I may say that I consider it a great privilege to ride at the head of the parade with Mr. Letts. I would not do this for any other organization that I know of outside of the military."

After marching down Broadway to First street, the parade proceeded to the Pacific Electric station, where cars were supplied by that company to convey the Scouts to Exposition Park. There lunch was served to the boys, who later on participated in an athletic carnival.

OVER HALF A MILLION FROM THRIFT STAMPS.

FIGURES of the effect of the campaign in this city for the sale of the War Savings and Thrift Stamps, were furnished by Postmaster Harrington Brown, yesterday. The sale of these patriotic securities began on December 3, last, and the total sales for that month were $82,242.95. In January, when there was a general campaign for the sale of the stamps and certificates, the sales jumped to $269,011.83. February was a short month and the sales were $203,793.37. The aggregate sales from December 3, 1917, to March 1, 1918, were $545,048.15.

It is believed that the monthly sales will run about a quarter of a million dollars for an indefinite period, reports coming to the postmaster indicating a constant increase in the patriotic feeling of the people with the progress of the war. This is indicated by the growing demand in parts of the city that up to the last thirty days had not shown much interest in the movement.

The four-minute talks in the various places of amusement in Los Angeles, and public gatherings where the necessity for buying these stamps is emphasized, are credited with the increasing interest all over the city.

It has come to the postmaster's attention that in a number of families a fund is set aside weekly from the earnings, which is invested in these forms of government securities. The expenditure is provided for in the same way as putting aside money for groceries or rent.

The earnings of the Los Angeles postoffice for February amounted to $241,050.88, as against $203,272.19 for February, 1917, and $186,073.47 for February, 1916, showing an increase of $37,778.69 over the receipts of the same month last year, or 18.58 per cent.

WIDOW LOSES DAMAGE SUIT.

Edgar L. Du Bose was killed when a Pacific Electric car struck his automobile near Lankershim on May 21 last. The widow, Mrs. Mae Frances Du Bose sued for $25,000 damages. Yesterday a jury in Judge Monroe's court gave a verdict in favor of the corporation, the latter showing that Mr. Du Bose had been negligent.

WIDOW SEEKS ESTATE.

The late Edward M. Boyd, who met his death in an automoible accident on the Bear Lake road on October 17 last, left no will and yesterday his widow, Mary D. Boyd, filed a petition for letters of administration on the estate, valued at $2654. The property consists of a promissory note and stock in a San Pedro newspaper.

When the Day is Done.

I have eaten a bale
Of spinach and kale,
And I've never raised a row.
I have swallowed a can
Of moistened bran
And I feel like a brindle cow.
I am taking a snack
From the old haystack
In the evening shadows gray,
And I'm glad, you bet,
At last to get
To the end of a meatless day.

The Mehlin
Inverted Grand

is a grand piano in the form of an upright—the ONLY upright in the world possessing all the acoustic principles of the grand—

THE designers of the Mehlin Piano have taken for their inspiration the correct acoustic principles embodied in the harp and violin—as especially exemplified in the GRADUATED ACOUSTIC BRIDGE, giving, as in the harp, slight depth for the short strings from the sounding board to the bridge, and gradually increasing depth as the strings increase in length—thus equalizing the tone vibrations throughout the entire scale.

Another important exclusive feature akin to the harp and violin in its acoustic principle, is found in the cut-off or open-end sounding board of the Mehlin. By leaving a space between the end of the sounding board and the rim of the piano, the vibrations ripple off freely as they travel along the grain of the spruce, giving greatly increased volume and quality of tone.

To really comprehend the radical advance in piano construction represented by the Mehlin, you must let us demonstrate its seventeen exclusive patented features, each a fundamental improvement.

DEAF WOMEN DO WAR WORK.

Red Cross has Auxiliary for Hard of Hearing.

Sewing Circle Turns Out Many Useful Things.

May also Help to Teach Men Injured at Front.

Seemingly sane seamstress of sensible sewing circles sometimes say several silly sentences.

But don't you dare make that assertion in the presence of a certain sewing circle at room 330, Mason Building, for although not a single member of the class would hear you, they would all understand what you said. The society referred to is the Auxiliary of the Red Cross for the Hard of Hearing, a class which has just been organized by Mrs. J. W. Reynolds. It is composed entirely of deaf women who are engaged in making sponge wipes, compresses and other surgical necessities for the Red Cross.

Mrs. George L. McDermott has been sent from Red Cross headquarters to teach the women the art of preparing bandages and various other apparatus for the young men at the front who may require them.

PROVE USEFULNESS.

"It's a splendid class," said Mrs. McDermott yesterday, "and the women are doing excellent work. We have twenty members at present and expect to have more as time goes on. One noticeable feature is the absence of chattering, although all of the members could understand one another very well by reading the lips. In the past, the deaf have been considered objects of charity, but at last they are finding an opportunity to prove their usefulness to others.

"Not only are the members of our society preparing surgical dressings, but most of them are taking lessons in lip reading so that they may be able to teach the young men who may come home deaf from their experiences on foreign battle fields. We also have a salvage department, which is conducted in connection with the general salvage department of the local Red Cross chapter. Our salvage headquarters is in room 406, Mason Building, and, while we cannot accept anything and everything, we are glad to get old jewelry, hair switches and any small, valuable articles that do not take up too much room.

DONATIONS NEEDED.

"These things we turn in to headquarters and are given credit for them. So far, we have been receiving gauze, muslin and other material used in surgical preparations from the headquarters. This, however, will probably last only a few weeks, the Red Cross having given out the material to the various auxiliaries in order to get an estimate of the general output of work of the auxiliary branches throughout the city.

"After about the first of March we will probably have to furnish our own material and this we must get through donations, benefit entertainments and in every other way possible. The women feel at home here and seem glad to be able to contribute their mite toward winning the war."

The society meets in the Mason Building every Tuesday and Thursday afternoon and all deaf women who want to join the happy workers will be heartily welcomed.

"Oh, Surely You Will Not Price These Heavy, Rich Gold and Silver Metal Laces at $1.00 Yard?"

—Said the head-of-stock to the department chief: Why Mr. (———,) we have the same patterns in the regular stock, some of the best selling merchandise we have, at ——— and ——— and she named prices that make half-price seem insignificant.

—We anticipate the 1200 yards, that we have secured, to be closed out before the day is over, for certainly no such laces have been unpacked, in our Receiving Room, for months, we might say, in years, to offer at such a price.

—Why look at them — 2½ to 14 inches wide—those heavy metal, silver and gold laces that are now in the very first demand for trimmings, evening gowns, etc.

—The like of these laces has not been offered before in a sale way, and certainly not at the price.

—"They're marvelous," "They're beautiful," "They won't last the day out," these are the enthusiastic expressions of the people in the department, who saw the laces.

—They'll be in the window, and they'll be ready on the counters, bright and early Monday morning. From what we have seen of the laces and what we know of values in merchandise, we would advise you to be one of those who will be waiting at the doors when the store opens, for merchandising lots, like this, come only at rare intervals.

WILD ASS HAS MANY A BRAND.

Heney's Registrations Rise up to Confound Him.

"Progressive," "Republican," "Democrat;" Nothing.

If There was Anything Else He Would Join it, Too.

As a public-spirited citizen, Francis J. Heney is one of the best steeple-chasers in politics. As a sincere would-be servant of the people, the Wild Ass of the Desert has been branded so many times, by himself and others, that now he looks like a cross between a French waffle and a plate of tagliarini.

The coldly calculating records are rising, like a well-known Danish ghost, to accuse and drive with scorn this self-serving, self-loving adventurer.

Mr. Heney, who now aspires to the Governorship of California, is not a registered voter in this State, because he has been absent so long he has not gotten his name affixed upon the new registration. How he will register, when he returns to the scene of his political philanderings, will be a matter of mystery, if not of interest.

ONCE A PROGRESSIVE.

In 1914 Heney was registered as a Progressive. The records in the office of Registrar Zemansky at San Francisco, where he lived at that time, show that he was a registered Progressive living at No. 663 Fell street.

The reason he was registered as a Progressive was that he was seeking the Progressive nomination for United States Senator. He might also have run as a Democrat, as there was a lurking suspicion that he had at one time or another affiliated with that party. But the fact that James D. Phelan, a Democrat, was seeking the nomination of that party for Senator probably frightened Heney away from the primary of the "unterrified."

Having been defeated for Senator, as a Progressive, Heney saw the approaching funeral of the Progressive party and joined the great army of deserters by registering as "non-stated" in 1916.

WHY HE CAME SOUTH.

The records at the office of the Registrar of Voters in Los Angeles county show that Heney gave No. 958 Fourth street, Santa Monica, as his residence on January 21, 1916 when he declined to state a party preference. Why Heney moved from San Francisco to Los Angeles now becomes obvious, inasmuch as he is a candidate for Governor and to the south rightly belongs the position this year.

Having been branded this way and that way until his political cuticle was a patchwork, Heney remained content with his designation as a "non-declared" voter. He didn't know to what party he belonged, and neither did anyone else.

Since registering as a non-stated voter in January, 1916, Heney began to itch to get into action. Two years before the people of California had told him, in no uncertain terms, they did not want him to represent this State at Washington, so he thought he would change his residence to the southern part of the State and lay his plans for the gubernatorial race in 1918.

THE TALE OF A FEUD.

Shortly after January, 1916, Willis Booth become a candidate for United States Senator. Heney had no particular liking for Booth, and really never became interested in his candidacy until along toward summer when Hiram W. Johnson became a candidate for the same office. Johnson ran on the Republican and Progressive tickets.

Then Heney sat up and took notice. Vividly did he recall that in 1914 Johnson defeated him for Senator by making a political deal with the Phelan crowd. Johnson told Heney he never would be Senator, and he never was, and never will be. Heney hated Johnson with all the venon of a gila monster and Johnson loathed Heney about two venomous pegs more than that.

Heney couldn't have hurt Johnson by reregistering as a Progressive, because in that party the Governor did not have opposition. But he could hurt Johnson a little, perhaps, by reregistering as a Republican and voting for Booth.

HIS VOTE FOR BOOTH.

Wherefore, the records show that on July 27, 1916, two days before the registration closed, Heney changed his registration from the "no party" column to a Republican.

Doubtless he voted against Johnson by voting for Booth. That, at least, was his purpose.

It is also said, with authority, that in 1916, when Booth and Johnson were running for United States Senator, Mrs. Emma Heney called at Booth headquarters and tendered her services, plus those of her hurdling husband, in the endeavor to defeat Johnson.

Heney has been in and out of every party. If he has ever been welcome in any, that comforting word has been rubbed off the mat long before this.

BUT NOT THAT STAIN.

The Republican party in California has had to bear a great many burdens; it has gone over a tortuous path; it has had its ups and its downs, has been the object of calumny and scorn and ridicule and abuse; it has contracted disease, and has cured many. It has risen triumphant and slid downward ingloriously, but never has the Republican party committed so egregious a wrong as to merit the stigma that attaches to it by the registration in its ranks of Francis J. Heney.

And we may wonder just what kind of emotions will move the Democratic party of California when Francis J. Heney comes back from his windmill jaunt in the East to run for Governor on the Democratic ticket.

Neutrality's Reward.

Norway has lost during the war, a total of 714 ships of more than 1,000,000 tons.

Its seamen to the number of nearly 900 lost their lives through the sinking of these carriers.

In addition, fify-three Norwegian vessels have been posted as "missing," two-thirds of them being victims either of mines or of submarines following the Luxburg policy of "sinking without trace."

Seven hundred men went to their doom on these ill-fated craft.

This is Norway's reward for its neutrality—the price it has paid for retaining the "friendship" of Germany.

Many other nations would account the price altogether too high.

In fact, there have been occasions when it seemed that even Norway almost was beginning to POLITICS.

The American Game.

THE WATCHMAN.

ND OF POLITICAL THOUGHT AND ACTION.

By the Sentry on His Beat.

The Council is drafting new traffic regulations. Some of them are good. How about this one: "It will be a violation to stop any automobile in front of a saloon on and after April 1." Eh?

Stephens's official announcement on Friday that he will not make a campaign for the Republican nomination was the most interesting development of the week in the gubernatorial situation. The excuse by the Chief Executive was that "I am too busy to do politics; the war is on and California must keep up her end."

of those words sound mighty to the patriot; but did the Governor mean what he said? I don't believe he did. I am of the opinion that he was handing out a little campaign and what he really meant was that "I have a cinch on the nomination through the of my Progressive brethren the use to spend a barrel of money when I will win without it?"

The Governor might do that very thing, but I doubt it. Besides, well-known fact that the Governor is not a stemwinder as a campaigner. He is a good mixer; but it comes to getting up before an audience, he isn't there. Oscar isn't there. So that while he may be sincere in saying he will not make a campaign, he means he will not go out on the stump himself. doubt wants to follow the lead of President Wilson, two years ago, the President was busy trying to keep us out of a war that we have gone into two years before, the President didn't make an campaign, but he certainly every State in the Union with guns on the government pay and it is likely that Gov. will send out his sharpshooters in a few weeks to whip the into line for him.

From the North come glowing reports of the early campaign work done by Thomas Lee Woolwine. He was given a real hearty in San Francisco. Up there politicians are curious to see man from the South who has the temerity to aspire to the big job. they looked Tom over. The Democrats gloried in his attack on Heney and voted him a very young feller.

There has been some talk of C. Jordan running for Governor. He is now Secretary of State it is my honest belief he will be out a petition for re-election the time comes. I don't believe a word of this gossip about him for Governor. He is the best handed mixer in California knows more votes personally any other man. It is getting Jordan is a tradition in the of State's office, and we forgotten if there ever was a to Frank.

Of course, no one knows on what Francis J. Heney is going to for Governor, but it isn't likely will be content with only one. friends have been spreading word around that he is to be by Senator Phelan and the administration crowd from Washington, but now comes the report that Charles Fay of San Francisco has been in almost daily conference with Dist.-Atty. of the spring post having formally closed, it is about for the uprising of the mushroom campaign publications, the professional petition circulators, the or- with - several - thousand- voters crank and the man always carries no less than three districts in his vest pocket. give fair warning to candidates that this is regarded as a year by regulars who eat between campaigns. They forward to the oncoming festivities with a great deal of keen anticipation. May I also remind candidates and others that may take an active interest in the hostilities that this year campaign expenses will be about 50 per cent. higher than two years ago, owing to added cost of postage, paper, etc.

While he has not formally declared himself, it is known almost to a certainty that State Senator Joe Rominger of Long Beach will be a candidate for the Republican nomination for Lieutenant Governor. He will run independently and his fine record in Sacramento coupled with the advertising he will get as the father of the Rominger anti-saloon bill makes it certain that he will be one of the formidable aspirants. If he loses he figures he will have won because he still would have his job in the Senate, being a hold-over. Then the campaign would make him better known—something he may need in the future.

The old stalwart, L. L. Lostutter of Pomona, is somewhat interested in Joe's success. If the Senator should land the lieutenancy Mr. Lostutter would throw his hat into the Senatorial ring, with good chances for victory. It will be recalled that when Mr. Lostutter was a candidate for delegate to the national convention, he received about 95 per cent. of the votes in Pomona. He smashed the old saying "that a prophet hath no honor in his own town."

Frank Merriam, Assemblyman in the Seventieth District, of which Long Beach is the center, will have some real opposition in his race for re-election. Bernice Edgar, who is very popular as a member of the County Republican Central Committee and of several leading clubs in Long Beach, has announced her candidacy. She is, of course, "dry" and will puncture many of the planks in her male opponent's platform.

Enemies—political—of Sheriff Cline are stirring up a big mess in connection with the attempt to make him pay back to the county a few thousand dollars of fees. I don't know much about the merits of the case, but I do know that our Sheriff is generally regarded as a square shooter and he is not the kind of man who would take a dollar that doesn't belong to him.

"Doc" Whitesides plans to stage the biggest rally of the season at the South End Republican headquarters next Thursday evening. The "Doc" says his club has umsteen thousands of members and all of them will be present. Among the speakers will be Frank Dominguez, Judge Craig, Judge White and Judge Summerfield.

URGES PAYMENT OF TAXES EARLY.

County Official Says Money Can be Saved if Plan is Heeded.

An urgent appeal has been issued by W. O. Welch, county tax collector to taxpayers to pay their taxes early so that a last minute rush may be avoided. Mr. Welch points out that if a substantial portion of the sum due is paid during the present month not only will the rush be avoided but the county will save money which otherwise must be paid as interest on registered and unpaid county warrants.

The rapidly growing tendency of the taxpaying public to delay paying taxes until they are nearly deliquent presents a serious problem to the officials and necessitates the employment of many additional clarks and added expense, which can be avoided, Mr. Welch says, if the taxpayers will line up early.

"Public Information."

FOUR-MINUTE MEN: WHAT THEY ARE; WHAT THEY DO.

Army of Fifteen Thousand Speakers to Tell Government's Aims.

FIFTEEN THOUSAND Four-Minute Men, aides of the United State Committee on Public Information, have for the past week been speaking in theaters throughout the country in "The Danger to Democracy" in a campaign to clearly set forth Germany's aims and plans, and to show how their practice results in the breaking up of democratic ideas throughout the entire world. This particular phase of their work ends tomorrow.

In April of last year, President Wilson, by the following executive order, created the Committee on Public Information:

"I hereby create a Committee on Public Information, to be composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and a civilian, who shall be charged with the executive direction of the committee. As civilian chairman of the committee I appoint Mr. George Creel.

"The Secretary of State, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are authorized each to detail an officer or officers to the work of the committee.

"WOODROW WILSON.

"April 14, 1917."

This committee, at all times, has had access to every kind of government report. The Four-Minute Men, working in conjunction with it, are strictly under governmental control. Speakers are enlisted and enrolled and a careful record is kept of all their work.

During the Liberty Loan, Red Cross, Red Star, Thrift Stamp and income tax campaigns, the government has been greatly aided by the Four-Minute Men, who have brought to light the necessity for these movements, and have been instrumental in greatly swelling the funds. "Stumping" the country in quest of funds, however, is not the sole purpose of the Four-Minuters. Whenever any big national issue arises they are called upon to inform the public. When the need for men to work in the shipyards became apparent, President Wilson sent out a country-wide appeal, and the result was that 30,000 men in this county alone were enrolled in the business of building up the merchant marine.

MANY SPEAKERS HERE.

The organization is under the direction of William McCormick Blair. Under him are the various State and county chairmen. The Los Angeles county office of the Four-Minute men is located at the State Council of Defense headquarters, No. 719 South Hill street, and is presided oved by Marshall Stimson. One hundred and ten speakers are enrolled in the Los Angeles branch, and from seventy to eighty take part in every campaign, generally covering about that number of theaters throughout the county. In the recent campaign for enlisting shipyard workers the report sent to Washington by the local office showed that there were sixty men who made 130 speeches, covering seventy-five theaters, and speaking to a total audience of over 70,000 people.

The campaign entitled "Eyes for the Navy" was very short, though unusually productive. Launched for the purpose of securing spyglasses, binoculars and telescopes for the use of the navy in its warfare against submarines, it netted the government thousands of the needed glasses. Ensign Harris of the Naval Recruiting Station here reports that 330 pairs of field or marine glasses have already been sent on to Washington from Los Angeles.

Mr. Stimson, in explaining the workings of the organization, said: "Campaigns are inaugurated by sending a bulletin from Washington to the local chairman. These bulletins give directions for the length and subject of the campaign, in addition to full information regarding the subject which is compiled from the very latest data available to the government. As the Committee on Public Information, under the supervision of George Creel, has full access to all government reports, including those of the secret service, and the State, Navy and War departments, the Four-Minute Men often get information not known to the general public, and are the means of announcing information which has never before been given out."

OUTLINE OF SPEECHES.

The outline of the speeches in given in full and the men, since they represent the government, must make their speeches strictly in accordance with the information supplied by the government. The organization is extremely complete and thorough. Strict discipline is maintained and speakers who enlist are only enrolled after a careful investigation as to their qualifications, loyalty and standing in the community has been made.

Speakers' meetings are held in advance of the campaigns. Usually those especially qualified to speak on the subject appear and give a sample preliminary four minute speech.

A roll call is taken at each meeting and a careful account of attendance at speakers' meetings is kept at all times. The assignment sheet for each campaign shows exactly to which theater a speaker is assigned and the date on which he will appear.

A local bulletin calling for the speakers' meeting is sent out beforehand and a reply card is enclosed which, when filled out, contains information for the secretary. Each speaker is given an assignment and a report card at the meetings. These give the name of the theater in which he is to speak. The report card has a column for noting the number in the audience. After the campaign is over, speakers return cards to the local headquarters so that within three or four days after the campaign closes all the information is collected on the assignment roll in the hands of the chairman and a report sent to Washington. This indicates the number of speakers who took part in the campaign, the number of speeches made, the theaters covered, and the approximate number of people addressed.

INSPECTORS VISIT.

Unknown to the speakers, inspectors visit the theater and report on the time and manner of speaking, in addition to the popularity and reception of the speaker.

During the recent heatless days in the East, the State Fuel Administrators were requested by the Fuel Administration to prolong for four minutes the closing time of all theater in which Four-Minute Men were scheduled to speak. In a special bulletin to the chairman of all the Four-Minute Men of the country, Director Blair said:

"We feel happy to have been able to obtain this extension of the closing time for theater which extend to us the privilege of addressing their audiences, thereby rendering the government most valuable assistance in its tremendous task of arousing and informing people on subjects of vital importance in connection with the winning of the war."

The Four-Minute Men comprise some of this city's most prominent citizens: W. H. Anderson, F. W. Blair, Judge B. F. Bledsoe, Joseph S. Crail, Charles F. Edson, Herbert Goudge, Lou Guernsey, Lorin A. Handley, Rev. E. Stanton Hodgin, Dr. E. J. Leavitt, Judge Paul J. McCormick, Nathan Newby, Seward A. Simons, Albert Lee Stephens, Marshall Stimson, Judge D. R. Weller, L. R. Wharton, Gesner Williams, Thomas Lee Woolwine and others.

BAD-CHECK CHARGE.

R. W. Van Deusen, a construction man, was arrested by operators of a private detective agency yesterday on the charge of passing worthless checks. According to the arresting officers, the man passed more than $200 worth of the alleged bad paper in several mercantile establishments. He is being held at Central Station pending investigation into the charges against him.

Hearkens to War's Call.

RETIRED TWENTY YEARS, HE'LL SAIL SEAS AGAIN.

HIS patriotism fired by the outrages of German autocracy Capt. Ernest Pryce Mitchell, proprietor of the El Camino Real Motor Car Company of Santa Barbara, has harkened to the call of the sea. Nearly twenty years ago he retired as master of a British ship and has resided at Santa Barbara nearly all the time since. Now that shipmasters to take cargoes through the danger zone infested with submarines are so much in demand, Capt. Mitchell has arranged his business affairs so that he can leave and is taking the examination before the United States steamboat inspectors at the harbor, which will entitle him to sail the seas as master of an American ship.

Capt. Mitchell is one of the leading business men of Santa Barbara. He owned the first gasoline automobile in Southern California. It was a French car and excited much interest in Santa Barbara when he began to drive it. Every since he has had a keen interest in automobiles and finally got into business himself.

The El Camino Real garage at Santa Barbara has a big glass bell in the lobby that is the admiration of all callers. Capt. Mitchell is often taken by tourists as the man who put up the signs along the old Spanish highway to advertise his garage instead of merely turning the sign posts to his advantage.

As soon as he gets his license as an American navigator, Capt. Mitchell expects to be assigned to one of the newly-built American ships and hopes to be able to run the submarine zone many times with American troops and American freight during the war.

RED CROSS RUNS OLD CURIOSITY SHOP FOR BENEFIT OF SOLDIERS.

Over Twenty-four Thousand Dollars Raised in Three Months by Sale of Donated Clothes, Jewelry, Books, etc., at the Canfield Mansion.

THE old Canfield mansion at Eighth and Alvarado streets has been the center of many scenes of humor and pathos since it became the chapter house and distributing point for old clothes, jewelry, books and what-nots for the Red Cross organization.

The enthusiasm and tireless energy of the workers has netted to the organization during the last three months more than $24,000. And this amount represents only the proceeds received from the sale of articles that have been contributed voluntarily by patriotic persons from all points in Southern California.

The shop, or barn, department store located in the rear of the premises has been the haven of many persons of meager means, and otherwise, to satisfy their bargain-hunting instincts. Men's suits for all uses and purposes may be found—anything from a nightdress to a full dress. Frontless vests and breastless coats, high and soft hats are daily placed on the altar of charity at a sacrifice. In fact, there is a standing offer from several of the motion-picture companies to take over all of the high hats donated at 75 cents the hat.

FOR A COLD MORNING.

A laboring man recently came into the shop and after explaining that his work necessitated his walking quite a distance in the early morning, and that he wanted some sort of garment to keep him warm, was finally persuaded to purchase a full dress cape by the resourceful saleswoman. Since that sale, considerable anxiety has been felt by the saleslady lest her laboring customer, while hurrying to work on some cold morning, may be mistaken by an over-zealous policeman for a social favorite or sun-dodger, going homeward on the morning after.

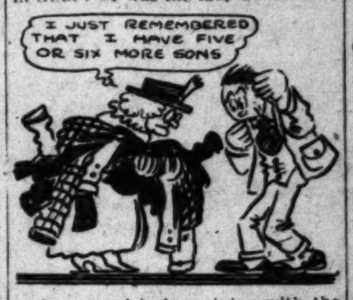
Not long ago a charitably inclined humorist donated one pair of No. 8½ shoes, though technically not a pair in the true sense, as both shoes were intended for the left foot. The women in charge of the shoe department were at a loss as to how they could dispose of them, when providence intervened and sent to the department a one-legged man. The attendant saw her opportunity, and after explaining that he could comfortably wear only one shoe at a time, struck a bargain for 65 cents for the pair, or rather, for the two, and immediately started to wrap them up. During the operation of wrapping, the honest saleswoman, as an afterthought, glanced at the remaining foot of the purchaser, and to her dismay, discovered that in so far as her sale was concerned, he had had the wrong leg amputated.

So the sale was lost, and a diligent search is now being conducted for a one-legged man who has been accommodating enough to have his left leg attached, and one whose foot is not larger than No. 8½.

ONE SON OR SEVEN?

Much speculation has been occasioned by an old lady who came into the shop stating that she wanted to buy a suit of clothes for her son. After a careful examination, she selected some seven suits of sizes ranging from a tall, thin man to a small, stout one, explaining to the attendant, while paying the bargain prices from a thick roll of bills, that she remembered having more than one son—in fact an even seven.

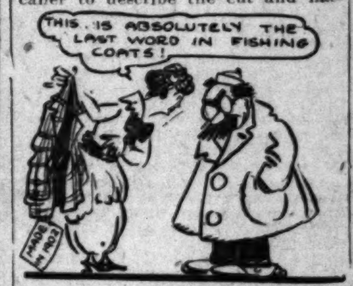
Can it be possible that the "old clothes man" has employed a purchasing agent to replenish his stock in trade? Or was the lady a financier, and an equal in bargaining with the "old clothes man," and seeing an opportunity of gaining a few dollars, confused the number of her family to justify her speculation?



I JUST REMEMBERED THAT I HAVE FIVE OR SIX MORE SONS

Last week a middle-aged man requested the attendant to find and sell to him a "fishing coat." This attendant being a social favorite of Hollywood, with two brothers whose wardrobes include all of the different costumes that tailors have invented for out and indoor sports, had always believed herself proficient in her familiarity with gentlemen's attire, and immediately started a protracted but fruitless search for a coat in the collection that had enough of a fishy smell to lend the suspicion that it had formerly seen service in that pursuit.

Finally the attendant asked the caller to describe the cut and material of the garment he sought, and it then appeared that the man was in the habit of fishing each day from the Municipal Pier at the beach, and that he wanted some warm, inexpensive coat to wear—in fact a "fishing coat." However, the attendant was not to be stumped and succeeded in selling the fisherman a coat and vest of the vintage of 1902, and convinced him that it was the latest and most approved style adopted by the best-dressed fishermen.



THIS IS ABSOLUTELY THE LAST WORD IN FISHING COATS!
MADE IN 1902

The other day a nervous man who was wandering about the shop, was accosted by a pretty girl and asked what he was looking for. The question so confused the caller that he replied that he was looking for "warm ladies' underwear of medium size," and then became so embarrassed that he dropped his bundle and slipped out of a side door.

So, to end the story, if you have an old suit that has thus far escaped the junk man, or even a new suit for that matter; or if you have extra shirts, shoes, dresses, hats, or anything else wearable, you are entitled to no peace of mind until the attic and closets are cleaned out and their contents sent to the Red Cross organization to contribute their worth for the benefit of our fighting men at the front.

MEXICAN IS NOT AN ENOCH ARDEN.

Pedro Delaego and Maria Delaego were married in Mexico and came to California. When Delaego returned to Mexico five years ago on a visit, Mrs. Delaego remaining in Los Angeles, the Villistas caught him. He managed to escape about a year ago and reaching this city, he found that his wife had married Marcelo Gonzales. She had believed him dead.

Gonzales realized the claim of Delaego and Mrs. Gonzales filed a suit to annul her marriage to him. Yesterday Judge York granted the decree.

BEAUTY SPECIALIST TELLS SECRET

A Beauty Specialist Gives Simple home Made Recipe to Darken Gray Hair

Mrs. M. D. Gillespie, a well-known beauty specialist of Kansas City, recently gave out the following statement regarding gray hair:

"Anyone can prepare a simple mixture at home, at very little cost, that will darken gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. To a half pint of water add 1 once of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and ¼ ounce of glycerine. These ingredients can be bought at any drug store at very little cost, or the druggist will put it up for you. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. This will make a gray-haired person look twenty years younger. It does not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off."

THERE are certain very obvious reasons why every Peck & Hills sale, whether it be for a single piece or complete furnishings for a hotel—carries with it tangible savings of a very definite character.

In the first place, we eliminate waste motion and rehandling cost and save thousands annually by importing ALL our materials direct. Mexico, Central America, Japan, China, India and the Philippines all contribute to the vast variety of commodities we bring in through Los Angeles harbor.

In the second place, we have combined our manufacturing and distributing systems under one roof, thus reducing to a minimum every detail of overhead expense.

Then, too, our experience of 20 years, resulting in a chain of ten big factories, has given us an intimate knowledge of what furniture buyers prefer and has made the Peck and Hills trademark known wherever good furniture is used.

Furnish Your Home the "Peck & Hills Way"

Hundreds of Los Angeles homes owe the luxurious comfort and artistic beauty of their furnishings to the Peck and Hills' way of selling DIRECT from the factory salesfloors.

DRAFT MEN WANTED FOR THE AVIATION SERVICE.

New Order Opens a Branch to National Army Men—Thousands to Join.

THE announcement by the War Department that men registered in the draft may now enter the aviation section of the Signal Corps, is expected to result in a large number of men in this section joining the aviation service.

Many new aviation fields will shortly be opened in California and a recruiting station already has been opened at the North Island aviation school near San Diego.

The new order of the War Department is said to open an exceptionally fine branch of the service, which has for some time past been closed to registered men. It is predicted that thousands of men will immediately take advantage of this opportunity to enlist voluntarily in this corps and thus serve their country in a branch of the army that is surpassed by none.

The enlisted men of the aviation section are nonflyers and are men taken from all trades. The accurate mechanical work necessary in repairing and adjusting the sensitive motors of the air craft calls for the best mechanics in the land. Highly-trained carpenters and wood workers are necessary to build and repair the delicate frame work of the wing-structure that it may reliably support the intrepid pilot who seeks his prey above the clouds.

HAVE EQUAL CHANCE.

Office clerks and stenographers have an equal chance in the work of this section in handling the many paper forms and records that Uncle Sam uses in his business in waging war.

In addition to men of trained ability, thousands of untrained men will be accepted by the recruiting board. These will be assigned to the training squadrons which receive instruction in the various duties until they are fitted for the field. Many a man will receive instruction and gain experience in this service that will fit him for good civil positions in after life.

The great increase in the size and importance of the Aviation Corps has in the year past given rapid promotion to the men who have qualified themselves. The present programme of the air service calls for an even greater increase immediately. Men entering the service now will have every opportunity for rapid promotion. This is a great opportunity for the men in this country no matter what their vocation may be.

A RECRUITING STATION.

In order to fill this ever-growing need a recruiting station has been opened at the Aviation School on North Island, San Diego, for the induction of registered men into the Aviation Corps. The officer in charge of this work has outlined the following procedure for drafted men who wish to apply for enlistment. The applicant should either appear in person or make written application to the Assistant Adjutant, Signal Corps Aviation School, San Diego, for induction from the draft into the aviation section.

In either case he must furnish the number of his local draft board, his registration number and his serial number. He will then be furnished with orders to his local board to induct him into the aviation section. If he has passed the physical examination given by the draft board he will be sent, with his physical examination papers, to the recruiting officer at the aviation school at San Diego, who will give him a further examination and enlist him if he is found qualified. In ordering him to San Diego his local board will furnish his transportation.

Advices received from San Diego report numbers of men already applying for enlistment. When it becomes generally known that drafted men may enter this service it is expected that hundreds of Los Angeles men who are now awaiting their draft call will make application. Great numbers of them entering now will be assigned to the new fields being started in California, and thus receive their training near their homes.

Meat Cause of Kidney Trouble

Take Salts to flush Kidneys if Back hurts or bladder bothers

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad's Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

More brains than metal are used in building this

MAXWELL TRUCK

Brains are hard to find and come high, but they are the cheapest in the long run. In a great organization like the Maxwell Motor Company which, in four years, has done a business in excess of $100,000,000, there are many great minds.

These great minds have found a way to make trucks stronger, yet lighter in weight (more thought and less metal went into the truck). These great minds have found ways to build them better, yet at less cost.

That's one reason why you can buy a Maxwell for $400 less than any other truck of similar capacity in the world.

That's one reason why the Maxwell has a verdict of close to 100% perfect from its service record based on the 6600 Maxwell trucks now in use.

ATTORNEY SUSPENDED.

T. E. De La Matyr Will Not Be Allowed to Practice Until Next October.

Judge Monroe yesterday suspended T. E. De La Matyr, an attorney of Clearwater, from practicing law until the first Monday in October next, after hearing the accusation of the Los Angeles Bar Association, represented by Attorney H. T. Morrow.

The court stated that he did not wish to disbar Mr. De La Matyr, as he had appeared in his court several times and seemed to conduct himself properly.

The court stated that he did not wish to disbar Mr. De La Matyr, as he had appeared in his court several times and seemed to conduct himself properly.

The charge was that the attorney had accepted $31 from Thomas Burch to put up for bail before Justice Phillips of Downey, but did not apply it. Mr. De La Matyr declared that after receiving the money he had been held up and robbed in an alley and could not borrow the sum until too late to apply it on the bail piece.

ADMITS LOOTING ON AQUEDUCT.

Leader of Mexican Band Tells of Numerous Thefts.

Second Cache of Machinery to be Located.

Junk Dealers Implicated are Being Sought.

Ramon Rojas, leader of the band of Mexican thieves that has terrorized Newhall and the aqueduct region for the last several months, made a complete confession last night at the County Jail. He will be taken to Newhall today by Deputy Sheriffs Coutts and Anderson to locate another cache of stolen machinery.

The deputy sheriffs were with Rojas four hours before he would talk of the exploits of himself and followers, four of whom have been lodged in the County Jail. Four more Mexicans implicated in the plot by Rojas, Jesus Rodriguez and Ruperto Saragoza, who also broke down and confessed, probably will be arrested today. Two receivers of the stolen property living in the San Fernando Valley are being searched for by the Sheriff's office.

The members of the gang now under arrest are Manuel Rodriguez, Jesus Rodriguez, Ramon Rojas, Juan Servantes and Ruperto Saragoza. Two of the thieves, Rojas and Saragoza, are ex-convicts. Saragoza was brought in Friday night.

Rojas in his alleged confession disclosed the methods of the gang and declared there were considerable machinery and valuable material stolen from the aqueduct now cached in Bouquet and Soledad canyons, near Newhall. According to Rojas, the members of the gang lived in shacks on a small rancho in Soledad Canyon. After an incursion by the gang it was customary for the members to separate for a while, at which time some of the thieves lived in Bouquet Canyon.

The activities of the band were first discovered by a man named Smith, owning a farm in close proximity to the rancho of the Mexicans. Valuable material, including pumps and machinery, had been taken from the aqueduct and elsewhere in the Newhall region to the value of thousands of dollars. Junk dealers operating in the San Fernando Valley were the alleged recipients of the stolen property, to whom it was sold for $15 a ton, according to the Sheriff's office.

IMPERIAL VALLEY LANDS DESCRIBED.

NEWLY PUBLISHED BOOK CONTAINS ACCURATE, FIRST-HAND INFORMATION.

The "Book of Facts" of the Calipatria district of Imperial Valley, an illuminating, useful and accurate treatise on Imperial Valley and especially of the rich Calipatria district, has just been published by the Imperial Valley Farm Lands Association. The book is superbly and profusely illustrated from photographs of actual scenes in the valley, most of them being taken during the past few weeks with the definite aim of showing the variety and quantity of products and how the farmers take advantage of the matchless conditions to make the soil yield enormous crops.

The book was compiled by members of The Times staff from information furnished by men who have had long experience in farming the fertile Imperial Valley lands. The purpose of the book is to give exact, detailed information that will be useful and helpful to prospective landowners. Care was obviously observed throughout the book to avoid extravagant or glowing statements, but to confine the various articles to known and proved facts.

The book will undoubtedly be of special interest to the man who has had opportunity to know but little about the wonderful valley, for it gives many actual experiences of farmers who have been successful, with exact figures on cost of land, expense of production, returns and net money yield.

The information department of the Farm Lands Association, room No. 3, second floor, Times Building, will be glad to give a copy of the book to anyone who is interested.

ALLURING SMILE LEADS TO COURT.

FIFTY-THOUSAND-DOLLAR ACTION BRINGS OUT DIVERGENT STORIES.

As the result of an alluring smile, Sterling Booth Childs and Mrs. Emelie Forrester formed an acquaintanceship, it is said, which finally led to Mrs. Forrester recently filing a $50,000 heart-balm suit. Mr. Childs, son of Daniel B. Childs, a wealthy retired attorney of the Wilshire district, resists this suit and in an answer, filed yesterday, pictures Mrs. Forrester as a divorcee, instead of the unsophisticated young woman she contends.

Her former husband did not have the pep, it would appear. In fact, Mr. Childs alleges, Mrs. Forrester declared that Mr. Forrester was too slow and not sporty enough for her.

The twain met on May 17, last, and, according to Mr. Childs, she invited him the following day to her apartments. He called, and more than once he called, so that on May 26 he says she went with him to a mountain hotel where he registered as Bruce Sterling and wife.

The arrangement was that he was to marry her as soon as he could support her, but being out of a position and dependent on his father, he said he was in no position to marry. Again she accompanied him to San Diego, but not at his invitation, he declares, and he registered as Mr. and Mrs. Sterling Booth Childs.

Mrs. Forrester's version does not jibe with that of Mr. Childs. She says she was persuaded to go on the San Diego trip on his alleged promise to marry her when they arrived in that city. She says he made the excuse of being ill. A few days later she says she paid her car fare to San Francisco and was prostrated as the result of her San Diego adventure. Mrs. Forrester is represented by Attorney F. D. R. Foote. Mr. Childs's counsel is W. L. Kuehn.

Edison spends a fortune to give you PROOF

Thomas A. Edison spends many thousands of dollars yearly in voluntarily submitting his wonderful instrument, the NEW EDISON, to the most gruelling tone test that could be conceived — a direct comparison between the voices of famous singers and the Re-Creation of their voices by

The NEW EDISON

"The Phonograph With a Soul"

This is a test that would ruthlessly expose the slightest imperfection, or the slightest difference between the Re-Creation and the voice of the singer, if any existed.

But that the NEW EDISON'S Re-Creations are absolutely true to life and without imperfection, is proven by the fact that this pitiless test has been made in public over one thousand times and before over 800,000 people, including 500 musical critics of the leading magazines and newspapers of America—always with the same general expression of opinion—"that the NEW EDISON'S Re-Creations cannot be detected from the original."

Is there any other phonograph manufacturer in the world who dares submit his product to this test? If so, no answer has been heard to Mr. Edison's challenge.

Another Test We Invite You to Hear

—a direct comparison between the NEW EDISON and all other leading makes of instruments. In this, as in any other fair test that may be made between the NEW EDISON and other instruments, the NEW EDISON gives overwhelming proof of its superiority in tone and realism.

WAR MAKES HARBOR LUMBER YARDS SCENE OF VIBRANT LIFE.

Over Forty-five Million Feet a Month Now the Average of Shipments Here—Seven Great Companies Engaged in the Industry—Prices Rising Steadily.

WITH one of the largest lumber ports of the entire world at our doors, the lumber situation as affected by the war points the weather vane of many a man's interest in that direction. For almost a month the government has held an embargo over all lumber sent to Arizona via the Southern Pacific, leaving hundreds of carloads stalled along the route. This embargo was removed last week to all points west of El Paso.

From the man who builds a chicken coop to the man who builds a skyscraper, the crust formed on the price of lumber as existing before the great war broke out, has reached a mark that is causing a furrow or two on his brow. Common lumber is selling at $33 per thousand feet, whereas in 1914 it sold for $25, making an advance of about a third. As for shipments, 1915 saw only 32,000,000 feet of lumber received as a monthly average at the harbor, but the following year found things picking up, sending the average per month during the last year to 45,000,000 feet.

The effect of the war upon lumber prices has been due to two causes, namely, the lack of ships and the lack of labor. Many ships have been taken over by the government for carrying food and coal, and the resultant scarcity of bottoms has sent water freight up to $8 per thousand feet. Five dollars is the normal water freight. At times it has gone done as low as $3.50. Again, during great building booms, such as after the San Francisco fire, water freight ran up to $11.

PROBLEM OF LABOR.

The labor problem finds itself strained because of the draft, which has left many open ranks among loggers and lumberjacks, as well as a general dissatisfaction among these classes struggling against the increasing cost of living expenditures.

The Northwest has been termed the "neck of the bottle" in this war, because of its spruce, from which all aircraft are made. This timber, as well as such fir as is suitable for shipbuilding, has been commandeered by the government. A permit is now required in purchasing large lengths of fir, and the government has placed restrictions upon the exportation of lumber.

As far as appearances go, it is certain that there is more lumber than land in the immediate vicinity of the harbor. There are seven great companies at the harbor, the E. K. Wood, the Kerckhoff-Cuzner, the San Pedro, the Consolidated, the Hammond, the Charles R. McCormick and the Blinn lumber companies. Altogether, there are 1200 men employed in the lumber yards of the Port of Los Angeles.

AN UNCERTAIN OUTLOOK.

Discussing the situation, J. A. Privett, a lumberman of twenty years' experience in this vicinity and superintendent of the E. K. Wood Lumber Company, stated that the coming year is looked upon as the most uncertain ever experienced.

Of all the lumber received here, 87 per cent. is Douglas fir (Oregon pine,) the three main sources of which are Puget Sound, Gray's Harbor (Washington,) and the Columbia River. The remaining 13 per cent. shipped into the harbor is redwood, which comes from the northern end of this State. Three-fourths of the hardwood brought into the harbor is received by the Western Hardwood Lumber Company. This is imported from Mexico and Japan, and includes about thirty varieties, such as oak, mahogany and Spanish cedar, the latter of which is used for cigar boxes, to retain the flavor. Every variety of lumber is peculiarly suited to a certain purpose, and a lumber dealer's first question put to his customer is upon this point.

An average of seventy-five ships come up the harbor "creek," as lumbermen call it, with their cargoes of lumber each month. During the past month eighty ships arrived with lumber. These vessels take about five days for the trip down from the sound, the time varying with the size, a smaller boat requiring more time. Many of these vessels come to San Pedro once a month, and some twice a month—the others go to San Francisco before touching here again. It takes three days to discharge a lumber vessel.

THE THREE FACTORS.

According to Henry Riddiford, secretary of the Lumber Dealers' Association, the harbor lumber market, which is the distributing point for Southern California and Arizona, is regulated by three factors, the first controlling factor being the local demand. A survey of the building permits gives an immediate estimate of this. The year of 1912 was the biggest lumber year on the whole Coast. The monthly average of the harbor lumber receipts was 70,000,000 feet. During those banner years of 1912 and 1913, the great boom was on in Los Angeles, many business blocks were erected, and the Los Angeles Investment Company set out whole colonies of bungalows.

The second controlling factor on the lumber business at the harbor hinges upon the development of mines in Arizona. If the mines are shut down the effect is immediately registered at San Pedro. Certain parts of New Mexico, Nevada and Utah are also supplied through this port.

About on a par with the second controlling factor in lumber consumption, comes the third—supplying the small towns in Southern California and Arizona. If the orange crop has been devastated by a frost or a heat wave has blighted the walnut crop, no rancher is ready to add outbuildings and fences, with the apparent result of a curtailing of the lumber demand in the country.

BIG RETAIL BUSINESS.

Last year the local retail lumber business at San Pedro exceeded any previous year. This was due to the government construction work and the general building boom going on at the harbor. At the harbor are also located three wooden shipbuilding companies — the Fulton Shipbuilding Company, Fellows & Stewart Yacht and Launch Company, and the R. J. Chandler Shipbuilding Company. Shipbuilding is going full blast now and in "one ship," the term for a ship of standard size, 1,622,637 feet of lumber are used.

The National Lumber Manufacturers' Association reports that for 1917 lumber to the amount of 2,000,000,000 feet was used for government purposes. The sixteen cantonments in this country have used in excess of 800,000,000 feet of lumber, and the 400 wooden ships for which keels were laid during 1917 have demanded a total of 600,000,000 feet. At American Lake, 57,000,000 feet of lumber, 64,000 sash and 15,000 doors were used. To build the Linda Vista cantonment, to which our harbor supplied some lumber, between 15,000,000 and 20,000,000 feet of lumber was necessary.

A further war effect upon this tremendous industry is the construction by the Southern Pacific of 3050 wooden freight cars in the shops at Los Angeles and San Francisco.

FOR AIRCRAFT BUILDING.

The most important part lumber is playing in war preparations is that taken by spruce for aircraft construction. This alone is a stupendous task, of an import not to be overestimated. The United States Signal Corps demand 11,000,000 feet of clear spruce monthly. From a logging standpoint this means a tremendous effort, since to secure this amount from stands of timber running 10 per cent. spruce, assuming that the logs produced would yield 10 per cent. airplane cuttings, it would mean that 1,100,000,000 feet of timber of all kinds would have to be logged monthly, or 13,200,000,000 feet annually.

Crossgrain has been one of the chief causes for rejection of airplane material at the eastern factories. Cross and spiral grain are the most treacherous defects that can exist in airplane lumber. After all the defective portions have been removed the wood goes into kilns, remaining from seven to twelve days, according to the size of the lumber. Then it is ready to be shipped to the airplane factories. Sawmill men are producing only about 25 per cent. of vertical grain stock from the spruce logs, due to the fact that their equipment is not adapted to this purpose and for the further reason that their object is quantity, not quality.

A NEED FOR SPRUCE.

Only about a third of the necessary spruce logs are being produced. During the last few months an average of only about 3,000,000 feet of spruce was obtained and it has been necessary to use some edge-grain fir because of this shortage. In an endeavor to offset the shortage the government has founded the Loyal Legion of Loggers to arouse every ounce of patriotism in the loggers. The government is also sending military loggers into the spruce woods, since many of the camps have been short of men.

Spruce stock must be produced not only for our own machines, but for our allies as well. Germany is obtaining airplane material with forced labor in the Russian forests on the Baltic which do not belong to her. Col. Brice P. Disque, commanding the spruce production division of the American Signal Corps, has said that a dozen axes in the northwest forests may prove to be worth more than a regiment of rifles in France.

The story of the market for box board is sensational. The demand for boxes in which to pack the different materials required by the Allies in the prosecution of the war has been simply enormous and the call for lumber to make them exceptionally heavy.

THE LOGGERS' WORK.

In England most of the mills are engaged on war work, making such articles as shell boxes, but there is little demand for timber from the Pacific Coast outside of the demand for material required for airplane work, which is very great. Common lumber in England sells at $315 per 1000. Before the war similar stock would cost $80. The British lumber merchants have been restricted in their sales to private customers. At first this was $5 worth per day, but upon protest was raised to $25 worth per day.

According to those who know, logging designates a hard life and hard work without a layer of swansdown anywhere between. The trail from the logger down to his coworker—the lumberjack—at the other end of the line, is a long one, varied and fascinating at every new turn. There are loggers—and loggers. The true logger of the best type is a great, good-hearted fellow such as one finds up in the Coos Bay region. But today many of the loggers have become inoculated with the I.W.W. germ, and since the June strike in Oregon labor conditions have been extremely mixed.

The laborers who join the I.W.W. are sometimes so ignorant that they mistake an I.W.W. membership card for naturalization papers. An example of this occurred at the harbor when an emigrant applied for a job at one of the lumber yards.

SHOWED I.W.W. CARD.

Having replied in the affirmative, upon being asked if he were a citizen of the United States, the foreigner was asked to produce his naturalization papers. Without hesitation he pulled out the red membership card of the I.W.W.'s and wanted to know if that wasn't all right! The logger receives the best of food and the warmest of clothing in the grandeur of his workshop—the forests of fir or those of redwood.

In many instances logging is operated differently than in former years. To begin with, where a man owning timber formerly put in his loggers and equipment, he now turns over this business to a firm that furnishes the men and gets the logs out. For this latter work, there are various methods. Sometimes a little railroad is run far into the woods to carry the logs away. Again, a lumberman will go up by a little bay on Puget Sound, using a cable to swing his logs down to the water just as the filovias are getting the men and guns across Alpine chasms and up to snowy peaks in Italy. From this bay or mill pond, the logs are "snaked" up into the mill, and at a dock near by will be a schooner or two ready to take on the logs now sliced up into lumber and carry them to far ports.

Another method employed in managing this end of the lumber business, is via a flume perched on a bridge-like woodwork. This water-filled flume takes care of the logs with dispatch.

PORTABLE RAILROADS.

The very latest innovation, particularly practical where timber is scattered, is the caterpillar tractor, which is nothing more than a portable railroad, the shoes taking the place of the sleeper or ties of a railroad. This product of the Pacific Coast is now used around the world and will pull anything which forty horses pulling at the same time can pull together. This caterpillar tractor with its log-laden trucks pulls through deep snow or rough road way without balking.

The days of the lumber schooner flying sails full of wind are over. "It is the only way to go to sea," said a sea-bred captain of one of the E. K. Wood ships, but steam has displaced that more idealistic way. Twenty years ago the trip from the sound to the harbor might have been made in three days, but more often it was three weeks, the conditions being far more favorable to a trip to Honolulu than to the port of Los Angeles, and at times lumber-laden vessels were blown almost to that Hawaiian port in those early days.

Twenty years ago the discharging of a lumber vessel meant sixteen days' work, whereas the same object is accomplished in three days now. Those were the days of rougher, cruder forms, when a lumberjack got $2 a day for nine hours' work, and was worth two men of the average class of workman procurable today when he receives $3.37½ for the same length of time.

San Pedro boasted only three lumber companies a score of years ago—the Kerckhoff, the San Pedro and the Southern California, which is now the Blinn Lumber Company.

It is a long call from those drowsy days to the present San Pedro, with its vibrant hum.

For a picturesque hour, in the midst of busy commerce, go out on one of the quays where the orange-colored booms point to a sky as blue as the water below and where the few clouds are as white as the few thousand seagulls that reflect their flight in the lagoon or perch en masse upon the piles of lumber, as undisturbed by the blue-shirted, full-bearded lumberjacks who ply with rope and tackle or with horse and dray in endless passage, as a friendly child might be.

Playing an Important Role in National War Programme.

URGES HOLDING OF LIBERTY BONDS.

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY OUTLINES PLAN TO PROTECT HOLDERS.

Through the local office of the Liberty Loan Central Committee, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo urges all purchasers of Liberty Loan bonds to hold fast to their bonds.

To protect the smaller Liberty bondholders who are, from time to time, being approached by agents seeking to induce them to part with their Liberty bonds and take in exchange securities which in a number of cases are of very questionable value, a conference was held recently in San Francisco by the bankers of the Twelfth Federal Reserve District, and it was their opinion that all banks should do everything possible to protect the small investor or holder of the $50 or $100 bonds by accepting these bonds for safe keeping, furnishing a receipt for them, and making no charge whatsoever for this service. Under this plan, a small investor will not feel obliged to engage a safe deposit vault for the safe keeping of his security.

The Secretary of the Treasury expresses the hope that every purchaser of a Liberty bond will realize that the only genuine help that he gives his government is in keeping his bond as an investment as long as it is possible for him to do so, and urges all bankers and financial interests to co-operate to protect the boldholders against ill-advised disposition of their bonds.

It is expected that the announcement of the county and committee chairmen for the handling of the forthcoming third Liberty Loan will be made during the next few days.

POSTPONED AGAIN.

Another postponement to March 8 was made by Justice Summerfield yesterday in the case of William T. Killymone, charged with embezzling $500 from Mrs. Gabriel Dilda, of San Francisco, in an apartment-house transaction.

The Joy Of Coming Motherhood

A Wonderful Remedy That is a Natural Aid and Relieves the Tension.

The expectant mother revolves in her mind all we understand by destiny. And it is of the utmost importance that her physical comfort be our first thought.

There is a most splendid remedy for this purpose, known as Mother's Friend. It is applied over the muscles of the stomach, gently rubbed in, and at once penetrates to relieve strain on nerves, cords and ligaments. It makes the muscles so pliant that they expand easily when baby arrives and pain and danger at the crisis is naturally less.

Mother's Friend is for external use only, is absolutely safe and wonderfully effective. It enables the expectant mother to preserve her health and strength and she remains a pretty mother by having avoided the suffering and danger which would otherwise accompany such an occasion. Every nerve, muscle and tendon is thoroughly lubricated.

Mother's Friend is prepared by the Bradfield Regulator Co., J-32 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. They will mail you an intensely interesting "Motherhood Book." Write them to send it to you, and in the meantime send or phone to your druggist today for a bottle of Mother's Friend.

Every woman should aid nature in her glorious work. Mother's Friend makes it possible for you to do so, and should be used regularly, without fail, night and morning.

Wonderful Satisfaction and Enduring Peace of Mind come With Ownership of a Hudson

In our daily lives we are all dominated, far more than we realize, by the innate and nearly universal reaching out for "beautiful lines."

The lines of The Hudson Super-Six this year, approximate more nearly than any other car at any price, "the ultimate confines of art."

This was demonstrated in no uncertain way by the vastly superior number and personnel of the throngs that stormed the Hudson Super-Six booths at the New York and Chicago Automobile Shows.

Ample Accommodations for Passengers, Both going to the Islands as well as returning to the mainland.

¶ Nothing is more invigorating than a six days' delightful cruise on the balmy Pacific, where there is no danger from enemy raiders or submarines. For Democracy.

TO MOBILIZE THE SCHOOLS.

Help They may Render the Nation Set Forth.

State "Blue Bulletin" Calls on Teachers to Aid.

Work of Junior Red Cross is Highly Commended.

"We need not teach jingoism, but we should teach patriotism and appreciation of the institutions under which we live." This expression of sentiment sets forth the pervading spirit of the last issue of the "California Blue Bulletin," published by the State Department of Education. The issue is especially devoted to matter bearing on patriotic work in the schools, and to teaching thrift as an always-desirable thing, but of magnified importance just now as a means to help win the war.

The bulletin's first page contains the proclamation of Gov. Stephens, setting a definite time each week for teaching the pupils conservation of food. The proclamation says:

"To teach that democracy means self-control and self-sacrifice, and to bring home more intimately to our people and our boys and girls, through the medium of our educational system, the purposes and needs of the national government in production and conservation of food supplies, I, William D. Stephens, Governor of California, urge upon all school authorities and teachers that a regular period on each Monday morning, beginning January 7, shall be devoted to instruction in ways and means whereby each pupil can aid materially in the nation's food conservation campaign."

MOBILIZING SCHOOLS.

The leading article in the bulletin is on "Mobilizing the Schools." It sets forth that the public school system must be made a greater agency for helping to mobilize the national resources in the supreme struggle to make the world safe for democracy, and that the first and greatest thing the young people of America should learn in school is love of country and the principles of democracy on which our national life is founded.

The work of the Pasadena High School is cited as an example, where the faculty has organized a course in which the causes of the war, the nation's war agencies and war needs and activities are fully discussed. Every high school in California is urged to adopt this plan, and it is also urged for the evening schools.

It is pointed out that the schools of California can render great service in helping to meet the present food crisis, and that the pupils should be impressed with the fact that we must eat less meat, less butter and less sugar, in order to help win the war.

HOME GARDENING.

Classes should be taught, it is urged, to prepare menus that will save things for our soldiers and the Allies' needs, and they should be encouraged in home gardening.

Special emphasis is laid upon the teaching of thrift, the giving up of unnecessary things, reducing of social activities that call for outlays of expense, the purchase of Liberty bonds and thrift stamps, and the practical use of savings banks.

The work of the Junior Red Cross is especially commended to each school in the State. Manual training is urged for every school where it can be applied, and vocational training is declared to be a great desideratum. With all this, it is urged there be a constant teaching of patriotism by every practicable method, so that the great army of school children may become a potent force in "doing their bit" for the preservation of democracy.

INSISTED ON MARRIAGE.

[illegible] Moved Out When No Wedding Bells Rang and Brings Suit.

[illegible] McFayden, answering the [illegible] lost-love suit of Sarah L. [illegible] yesterday, admitted that the woman insisted that he marry her, but he says there was no engagement. The complaint sets up that, becoming acquainted in May, the understanding was that the marriage would take place when Mr. McFayden found a suitable home. She moved into his house, she says, and lived until October 27 last. She moved out after insisting that he marry her.

Editorial

The man who added "co" to operation took the common clay of business and breathed a soul into it. The health, happiness and effectiveness of institutions and of people depend upon the co-operation of their parts. A finger that is out of joint is worse than no finger at all.

In the U. S. A. we all co-operate. The instances of disaffection are about as important as hang-nails, and about as quickly eliminated.

Robinson's is a notable example of helpful co-operation. It isn't the pushing, high-pressure sort that always is out of breath. It is the smoothly running, natural sort that lives cleanly, acts intelligently and has plenty of reserve force for any unusual requirements.

The eight hundred or so members of the Robinson staff co-operate, with each other, with customers, as in the cases of Liberty Bonds, Thrift Stamps, the Red Cross and Food Conservation, with their country.

Saving Thrift Stamps

Saving Thrift Stamps is a snug sort of service after all. If, for instance, in self-righteous patriotism, you eliminate two cigars a day and buy a Thrift Stamp instead, the first thing you know you have a hundred dollars that would have gone up in smoke otherwise.

You gained the hundred in money and a thousand dollars' worth of self-respect, besides. Patriotism pays. Thrift Stamps at Thrift Station. First Floor.

At Annual Picnic.

IOWANS HEAR EX-SECRETARY CALL WAR CRISIS NATION'S GREATEST

IF THE reader had been in Lincoln Park yesterday (and quite likely he was) he would no longer have any difficulty in understanding why Southern California is sometimes called "Little Iowa"—for, lounging on the green grass under smiling skies, visiting the ostrich farm and the "zoo," patronizing the merry-go-round and listening to patriotic music and speeches, 50,000 former residents of the Buckeye State, according to the estimate of Secretary [illegible] Parsons, of the State federation of societies, celebrated their annual midwinter picnic.

The big celebration was originally intended to be held on Washington's Birthday, but if George had been born in California on March 2, he wouldn't have been given any better send-off than he received yesterday by the members of the Iowa State Society. Cars going to and from the park were packed to the limit from morning until night and at no time during the day were there fewer than 15,000 persons on the grounds.

[illegible]ty acres, representing ninety-nine counties, were laid out for the picnic and Mr. Parsons stood like an angel of mercy at the badge counter, a big map before him, pointing out to every lost member of the tribe the direction he should go to find his registration booth. Reunions? Well, you'd ought to have been there! There were college reunions, church member reunions, surprise meetings by gray-haired men and women, old relatives rediscovered, old friendships renewed.

BADGES AND BUTTONS.

There were badges and buttons of all descriptions and colors—the red for the natives of Iowa, the blue for those who had lived in the old State but who were not "indigenous," white for those who had gone to Iowa fifty years ago and yellow for Iowa's friends. The red and the white were about evenly divided, but the wearers of all colors were equally happy.

Following the big basket dinner—the Fife and Drum Corps from various Southern California cities struck up their music. The most popular corps was that of the old veterans from Pasadena who, at 1:30 o'clock, ascended the speakers' platform and kept the great audience cheering almost constantly for half an hour.

Presiding over the ceremonies was Edward W. Hopkins, president of the Iowa State Society. Mr. Hopkins introduced H. W. Coffin, who led in the singing of America, which was followed by an address of welcome by John J. Hamilton who greeted the audience "not as Iowans, not as Californians, but as Americans." "No other salutation," said Mr. Hamilton, "would be appropriate at a time like this."

Mr. Hamilton was followed by Col. Frank H. True, president of the Federation of State societies, who spoke at length of the work of the federation and pointed to the fact that the organization had grown, in eight years, from sixteen State societies to the dignity of a federation that represented a society for every State in the Union.

BY LESLIE M. SHAW.

The chairman then introduced Leslie M. Shaw, ex-Governor of Iowa and former Secretary of the United States Treasury. Mr. Shaw immediately captivated his hearers by his eloquence and wit.

"Back in the eighteenth century our forefathers, with blood and sacrifice, placed upon the map of the world a union of States—a republic. In the nineteenth century our fathers, with yet more blood and greater sacrifice, preserved the integrity of that republic. Now, in the twentieth century, it is for us and our children, regardless of sacrifice, to perpetuate that republic and to insure to her citizens ever-enduring freedom and unrestrained opportunity.

"To my mind, this conflict exceeds each of the others in importance, as its cost in blood and treasure transcends everything in history. Far better would it have been had the war for independence been lost and America remained a dependency of England, with a government like that of Canada, than to be forever a vassal of Germany. Far rather would I see two republics and two flags within the territory which we proudly call our common country than to have Germany dictate the commerce of the world and impose conditions equivalent to tribute.

BECAUSE OF IDEALS.

"We entered the Spanish War because of ideals. We had no quarrel with Spain. She disclaimed responsibility for the destruction of the Maine, then offered to arbitrate her liability and ultimately offered to pay. It has been America's proud boast that the Spanish War was altruistic. Its justification rests in the report of a commission, created by authority of Congress, which found that Spain had violated human rights. This finding was made public, and Almighty God rolled upon the hearts of the American people such a sense of responsibility that with one voice they demanded that such things be rendered impossible of repetition.

"I do not attribute any great praise to the then President of the United States because he heeded that voice and led us into and through a conflict for which no man has ever been ashamed or had cause to blush. I do give him credit, however, for permitting the facts and conditions to be made known on which Americans based their judgment and which aroused their righteous ire.

"I do not particularly blame the President for promising to keep us out of war when only a few men here and there were breathing the spirit of '76, the spirit of '61, and the spirit of '98; but I do believe that if the positive proof of these atrocities had been published, and especially if the evidence which Mr. Lansing says is on file in the State Department, showing conclusively that the United States of America was the German objective from the beginning, had been made public, self-interest, if nothing else, would have led the people to demand that some preparation be made for the inevitable, and that both the President and the Congress would have respected this popular demand.

ATROCIOUS VIOLATIONS.

"Ten thousand enumerated instances of atrocious violations of civilized warfare and human outrages, many of them of unbelievable character, committed upon women and children and even infants, each supported by affidavits, were filed with the Secretary of State of every neutral country. These were available elsewhere from the first, and they are now available in America.

"Finally, after two years and a half of outraged international law, and unblushing terrorism inflicted upon conquered peoples, the President officially advised Congress of what every intelligent man already knew, that a state of war between Germany and the United States of America actually existed.

"In the face of these facts, let us all forget what we have been told to the contrary, what we may have said or thought or dreamed to the contrary, and accept the record, that record being the printed page of the proceedings of Congress, which alone has the constitutional power to declare war, and recognize that we went into this war for the sole and only purpose of keeping our country on the map and our flag in the sky.

"Now that we are in the war, God grant that the old American ideals shall again assert themselves, and that the stars and stripes henceforth shall stand for human rights wherever humans dwell."

Another big picnic held yesterday was that of the Montana State Society at Sycamore Grove. This celebration, also, had been postponed from February 22, but the ideal weather yesterday brought a splendid crowd to the park where a big dinner was served and many patriotic songs and speeches were enjoyed. Stirring addresses were made by J. Ross Clark, president of the society, and by a number of other speakers, prominent in the social and business life of the city.

MILLING COMPANY IN THRIFT DRIVE.

J. F. McBean, assistant to Motley H. Flint, county chairman of the War-savings Thrift-stamp Committee, organized the Globe Grain and Milling Company's War-saving Society yesterday, the meeting being attended by sixyt men and women office employees. Clyde M. Welsh was elected president and F. H. Capps secretary.

Government Action.

SEES TEMPORARY END TO NORTH'S LABOR TROUBLES.

F. J. SHIELDS, president of the Western Lumber Company of Aberdeen, Wash., which furnished all of the lumber used by the Grace Harbor Motor Ship Corporation, said yesterday that the government's action in taking over all lumber companies in Washington and Oregon would temporarily, at least, quiet the labor troubles in the Northwest, which have hampered seriously the output of spruce and timber used in the building of ships and airplanes.

"According to a telegram I have received from my superintendent, the government has not really taken over the yards, but has adopted the regulations of time and wages," Mr. Shields said at the Lankershim. "The men are to be paid on an eight-hour basis only, with nothing extra for overtime. This will mean that we shall have to add about 25 per cent. more men. We are now working twenty hours a day, and this cannot be accomplished in two shifts of eight hours. I believe it is the outcome of investigations of Secretary of Labor Wilson, who was in Seattle last summer.

"Our company turned out the first ship ordered by the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation. We have eight ways, and are turning out a 4000-ton ship every month. The I. W. W. menace, which scourged the Northwest last year, has been taken care of considerably, but the demands of organized labor there will never be satisfied, and the I.W.W.'s follow labor trouble wherever it is found.

"Another thing, we do not feel that the assumption of authority on the government's part in Washington and Oregon only is quite fair. It hurts our chances of competition with companies outside of that district. Nevertheless, considering the unsettled conditions of labor in our State, it is the best thing that could happen."

GLOBE SIGHTS.

Love is egotistical.

Every boarding-house has a mystery or two.

Being common protects us all from a lot of harm.

Some women seem to take great pride in their mental anguish.

When you say "as far as I know," you are not referring to any great distance.

The Irish are proud of the Irish, but they stick together less than any other race.

You have bad luck now and then to show you that you should not pin too much faith in your friends.

Some men leave home early each morning because they would rather battle with the world than with their wives.

An effort to inspire joy in the woman folks: Every man who is henpecked is henpecked because he is a weak-willed person, and irresponsible, and must be henpecked so that he won't get in harm's way.

The fact is, a man gets "dolled up" as much in a barber shop as any woman "dolls up" in her boudoir. The men haven't much cause to make fun of the vanity of women.—[Atchison Globe.

which was in competition with German business. So it appears that if the people of the United States establish a boycott against German goods during the war it will be no more than Germany did to the people of the United States before the war began, and that Steinhardt, himself boycotted by American employers, was merely repaid in his own coin.

IN COMMERCE.

The Central powers have consistently fomented sentiment which has reacted against them in the matter of business. This is what Prussianism is based upon. The United States government, in self defense, has been forced to levy an embargo against the shipment of goods into Mexico and to certain Central and South American countries.

This comes under the head of the trading-with-the-enemy act, and it has resulted in cutting off shipments of goods for Germans engaged in business in Lower California, Mexico and elsewhere to the extent that German storekeepers are desperately in need of goods with which to supply their customers. Their stocks have been depleted since the outbreak of the war, and they now find themselves unable to get goods either from the Fatherland or the United States. Regardless of the high prices offered for consignments of food and clothing by German merchants in Mazatlan and Ensenada, Lower California, the government refuses to let down the bars, and "business is rotten" among the German merchants down there.

KERNELS STOLEN.

Three barrels of walnut meats, valued at more than $200, were stolen from Joseph Firman, No. 112 Los Angeles Public Markets, by burglars who early yesterday broke through the rear door and took their loot away in an automobile truck.

At Cost of Millions.

NEW FIAT CITY RISES ALMOST OVER NIGHT AT CAMP LEWIS.

Greene Park, Big Business and Amusement Center, Built for Permanency—Stores and Hotels will Equal in Elaborate Finishings Any on Pacific Coast.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CAMP LEWIS (Wash.) March 2. Another western city has been builded almost overnight. It is Greene Park, Camp Lewis' business and amusement center, and its formal opening awaits only the arrival of the father of the project, Maj.-Gen. H. A. Greene, commander of the Wild West Division, who is expected to reach Camp Lewis Sunday on his return from France.

Unlike the mushroom cities of the early days which sprang up in the mining centers, Greene Park is thoroughly modern, carefully laid out, and built with a view to permanency. Today, this city by the army camp represents an investment of about $2,000,000. A few weeks hence the investment will be about $5,000,000.

There are more than fifty buildings in various stages of completion at Greene Park. Already it is plain that the city is too small for the business offered it and enlargements and additional units are to be begun before all the first are in service.

GEN. GREENE'S "DREAM."

Greene Park represents one of Maj.-Gen. Greene's fondest dreams. Soon after he arrived to take command of the Ninety-first Division, he began devoting his energies to solving the amusement problem for the western soldiers and evolved the scheme of building a city near the cantonment to be under military supervision. When he went to France, the city was on paper; it was a project. Today it is an actuality and it bears his name.

Businesses are established in Greene Park on the concession basis and only the most reputable persons and firms are allowed in the city. Modest prices will rule in the many establishments and a percentage of the profits will go for the benefit of the men in khaki, who will support it.

In this new city there are no two buildings alike. All are patterned after the Swiss chalet style. They are built out of Douglas fir and are stained for rustic effect, but the interior of these buildings will shame some of the finest on the Pacific Coast. A wonderful sweets or candy store, for instance, will be superior to any in Coast cities. A 560-room hotel will have more elaborate furnishings than any Seattle or Tacoma hostelry. A billiard and pool hall, to be the largest on the Pacific Coast, will have fifty tables and a maple floor to be covered with linoleum to cost more than $4000. There will be a twenty-five chair barber shop larger than any in Puget Sound cities.

READY FOR OPENING.

A number of establishments are ready to open today. They include a pool and billiard hall, shooting galleries, lunch rooms, fruit stands, waffles and hot cakes houses, barber supplies shops, novelty shops, shoe-shining parlors, popcorn stands, soft drink establishments, confectionery stores, root beer and cider stands, skee ball and bowling alleys, tailor shops and a garage. These include only some of the smaller establishments and are but a small beginning.

The garage is an example of the demands upon the concession establishments. Although it is not ready for occupancy, this garage is to be doubled in size by the addition of another unit. The first will accommodate 200 automobiles and this space was contracted for several days ago and enough more applications were on hand to warrant the construction of another building.

Grading and rolling of all the streets in the park have just been completed and before the end of the summer it is the intention to pave every street. A model sewage and garbage disposal system make Greene Park a spotless town and a water and fire protection system make the frame buildings almost as fireproof as the steel and concrete structures of the city.

WILL FILL THE HOTEL.

The 560-room hotel projected for Greene Park and to cost $500,000 could open its doors to a capacity business today. Eight hundred persons will be regularly employed at Greene Park and it will be necessary for the majority of them to live on the grounds. There are also in the neighborhood of 1000 officers in camp now living in Tacoma or the suburbs, who want to live on the cantonment grounds, and from 600 to 800 of these want to live at the hotel.

This condition has led to the announcement that as soon as this first unit of the hotel is well under way, a second unit, to contain 400 rooms and to cost $400,000, will be constructed. Plans have been made for a third unit which will be built if there is sufficient demand for rooms. The first unit of the hotel will be a four-story structure.

There will be two theaters in Greene Park, besides the Liberty theater in the camp proper. One will be a vaudeville house and the other will offer motion pictures. Both of these will be ready for opening about March 15. Each theater will seat about 2000 persons. The Liberty Theater, which is conducted by Col. E. A. Braden, representing the War Department Committee on Training Camp Activities, seats about 3000.

THE AMUSEMENT ZONE.

With this gigantic amusement zone in operation, men of the Wild West division will have a playground second to none; and with their opportunities for recreation increased their intensive training to fit themselves to lick the Boches also will be increased. The soldiers are given all varieties of training, first bayonet work, then trench work, then more bayonet training, some pointers in throwing hand grenades, then back again to cold steel work, for great stress is laid upon the necessity for being able to cope hand to hand with the Germans, and particularly armed with bayonets, as the Boches are known to fear this kind of fighting more than any other.

The latest recruit to the ranks of bayonet instructors is Lieut. W. R. Warrell, Fourth Canadian Mounted Rifles, who came to the camp fresh from the experiences of going over the top in hand-to-hand fighting with the Germans and being gassed with the new "mustard" gas.

"Well, I have fought hand-to-hand with the Germans—but, er—there's nothing to tell about that," modestly the officer admitted following his arrival at the camp. "Fighting with the Germans hand-to-hand is not particularly thrilling. It's a matter of life and death and you do your best because you have to. The German is a good fighter, but his system of using the bayonet is not anywhere nearly as good as ours and there is nothing that he is more afraid of than our cold steel. It wasn't the bayonet fighting or even the going over the top that got me—it was their pesky gas bombs.

MUSTARD GAS BOMBS.

"We weren't even firing—just sitting in the trenches one day last September when those German gas bombs began to drop on us. The bombs contained 'mustard' gas which was new, having been used for the first time last July. Now we know how to prepare for it and when the bombs first explode we rush our men out of the trenches, bathe them with a solution that counteracts the effects of the gas and let them go back. At first all we could do was to put on our respirators.

"These respirators fasten on our chests, have little tubes that clinch our nostrils so we can's breath through them and keep an appliance over our mouth which purifies the air as we breathe it. I couldn't keep mine on for more than four hours because my nose was paralyzed from the pinchers which closed the nostrils. I was exposed to the gas about sixteen hours, but it was more than ten hours before I began to feel the effects.

"Then my nose and throat began to burn, I began to go blind and under my arms and other places where I had perspired my body began to look and feel just as though it had been scalded. There were 120 soldiers and five officers in my company and all but three of us appeared in the casualty lists the next day.

"They took me to a French hospital first and then to an English sanatorium where I convalesced. It was over two weeks before I could see, and more than a month and a half before I could talk. The burns were painful, as all burns are, and so it was just recently that they ordered me back to duty.

"The after-effects of this mustard gas are not known. The great majority of the gases used by the Huns are fatal, but apparently I am practically recovered. We are carefully watching all symptoms.

"Your soldiers are the most like ours. We are all Americans. Over in France I have heard men say they would rather have their men like the Canadian soldiers. They will be saying the same things about the Americans now, and I won't blame them a bit."

"Cure Your Rupture Like I Cured Mine"

Old Sea Captain Cured His Own Rupture After Doctors Said "Operate or Death."

His Remedy and Book Sent Free.

Captain Collings sailed the seas for many years; then he sustained a bad double rupture that soon forced him to not only remain ashore, but kept him bedridden for years. He tried doctor after doctor and truss after truss. No results! Finally, he was assured that he must either submit to a dangerous and abhorrent operation or die. He did neither. He cured himself instead.

"Fellow Men and Women, You Don't Have To Be Cut Up, and You Don't Have To Be Tortured By Trusses."

Captain Collings made a study of himself, of his condition—and at last he was rewarded by the finding of the method that so quickly made him a well, strong, vigorous and happy man.

Anyone can use the same method; it's simple, easy, safe and inexpensive. Every ruptured person in the world should have the Captain Collings book, telling all about how he cured himself, and how anyone may follow the same treatment in their own home without any trouble. Hits and Bits.

EVELYN IS A FILM.

MISS NESBIT IS HARD WORKER IN FIELD OF ART.

Bringing with her a trunkful of favorable notices, Evelyn Nesbit Thaw will arrive at Clune's Auditorium tomorrow afternoon. That is, her celluloid double will arrive in a photodrama entitled "Redemption." While this is in no sense the story of Evelyn Nesbit's life, according to her own word, yet, having been written especially for her, there are many touches which reveal phases of her character and life which also touched the life of this much talked-of woman.

This is the first picture in which Miss Nesbit has appeared, though she is at present under a long contract. The notices say that Miss Nesbit can act; also that "Redemption" is an interesting picture. In any event the photodrama is certain to draw.

The heroine of "Redemption" appeared here last at the Orpheum, in a sketch. At that time her pleasing voice attracted much attention. She was also an excellent dancer. But it was neither her singing nor her dancing that most appealed; but that indefinable something known as personality.

"I'm not at all satisfied with what I have accomplished," Miss Nesbit said at that time. "I'm working night and day at my voice culture and my dancing; and I want to do worth-while things. Not only for my own sake, but for the sake of my little son Russell. He must have a chance in the world."

And so this young woman, frail in body—so frail that she often was carried from the stage in a fainting condition—yet had the spirit of ambition so strong within her that she was determined not to be beaten. That was the thing that appealed to even her detractors. Starting life as a chorus girl, and later attaining notoriety through the White-Thaw tragedy, she yet was not at all satisfied to make her livelihood through that notoriety, but was determined to get work through her own intrinsic attainments and ability. And those of us who saw her in vaudeville felt she had accomplished it.

Charlie Hits Hard.

The ambition of Charlie Ray, who appears at Grauman's Theater this week, in "The Family Skeleton," to convey from the screen the full realism of the scenes and characters he portrays, has led the youthful Ince star into some highly interesting, but rather harrowing experiences. The roles which Ray plays nearly always bring him into a fistic encounter with a man of much more powerful physique than himself, and often with a trained pugilist, and seldom does he complete a picture without taking or delivering a drubbing that makes both lame and sore for days.

In "The Family Skeleton," which opens tomorrow at Grauman's, Ray mingled with the rough characters of the underworld in three fistic battles, one of which is not recorded on the screen and does not enter into the plot.

Several of the scenes in this picture are laid among the denizens of the night life in a big city. Ray wanted the real atmosphere of a "dive," and he got it. With Sylvia Breamer, his leading woman, and other members of the cast, he paid a visit to the Barbary Coast in San Francisco, just before its glories were extinguished, studying barroom characters such as he was called on to play. In one of these resorts he ran afoul of an ex-prize fighter who ruled the district with a fist hard as a rock and swift as lightning.

One look at the assemblage of roughs in the resort led Ray to protest to the women of his party. He asked them to leave, but they persisted in staying to see it all. They stayed just a bit too long, with the result Ray had to light in and fight one of the toughs. It was a hard battle, but Ray finally threw the man out. Needless to say it was a red letter day for the denizens of Barbary Coast.

Fritz's Farewell Appearance.

"Fritz," Bill Hart's beloved pinto, will emerge from his retirement, and make one last farewell appearance in public. "Fritz," who has been his master's companion in so many dare-devil exploits, has been spending the last six months in the dignified seclusion of a well-appointed stable in Hollywood, and had definitely quit the excitement of professional life. His reappearance is due to no idea of monetary reward, but the appeal of his suffering mates in the war touched him so keenly that on Saturday, March 9, he will appear on the streets of this city with William S. Hart and make a personal appearance in aid of the funds of the American Red Star animal relief. This society has been founded by a number of patriotic citizens to alleviate, as far as possible, the suffering of the horses and dogs who are doing their bit with Uncle Sam's boys at the front.

Further details as to the time and place of the parade will be published during the week.

Linder will Return.

Max Linder, the famous French comedian, is to return to this country. He will arrive in April, and has corresponded with several cities in high altitudes, regarding the matter of building a studio in one of these. Linder's physician has told him he must locate in a high altitude, as otherwise his former illness will return. Several towns in Nevada have made Linder offers to build a studio for him.

Warwick is Safe.

Lieut. Robert Warwick, former stage star and picture favorite, telegraphs his New York office that he arrived safely in France, and is now in Pershing's lines.

Sylvia will Have Chance.

When Mrs. Humphry Ward's war novel, "Missing," is filmed at the Lasky studio,, with J. Stuart Blackton directing, Sylvia Breamer will have the leading feminine role. Commodore Blackton has written the scenario himself and will personally supervise the entire production.

The basic theme of "Missing" is the part women are playing in the present world war, on which theme Mrs. Ward has been phenomenally successful in gathering data.

Miss Bremer is a very lovely and talented girl, who has appeared in many Triangle and Lasky productions, but this is the first opportunity she has had to do really big emotional work.

Wally Draws Two Ways.

Drawing as an artist as well as an actor, Wallace Reid, has found a new job for himself. Outside of being a famous screen star and musician, he has just received an order from a prominent magazine for a series of cartoons. Reid has acquired quite a reputation among his circle of friends as a painter of colors, and it is only recently that he has taken up pen and ink work. Upon an eastern magazine seeing one of his efforts they promptly gave him an assignment, and therefore the midnight electric light has been brightly burning at the Reid home, while Wally wrestles with Bristol board and India ink.

Stepping from his station as an artist to that of a film star, Mr. Reid also stepped into a black eye, which he received in the conflict staged during the filming of a forthcoming Paramount production. Wally has been advised by a score of admirers to transfer his skill with the brush to his own face, and camouflage the eye so that the discoloration will not be noticed.

Whiskers for Sale.

There is great joy in the heart of Theodore Roberts, the famous character actor. For the past six months his heart has been low and his days lacking in sunshine. But now everything is bright and happy, for he is shortly to be given an opportunity to remove his beard. For the past half year Roberts's whiskers have been used in some form or other in many productions. Each week the star would go to Director-General Cecil DeMille and beg to be allowed to remove them, and at last it has been found possible to grant the request, and Mr. Roberts will appear in Mr. DeMille's production following "The Whispering Chorus" with the lower part of his face entirely nude.

Now Roberts is thinking of auctioning off his historic whiskers for the benefit of the Red Cross, the purchaser buying the crop as they stand and picking them himself or to be delivered f.o.b.

First Glaum Picture.

The first Paralta play in which Louise Glaum makes her appearance as a star is now practically completed, and there remain only fourteen scenes to be photographed, under the direction of Wallace Worsley. Monte M. Katterjohn, the writer of the story, has spent much time in the projection room during the past few days, and yesterday came forth blinking in the sunlight, to admit that the story looks all right to him. The working title of this production was "Intelligence," but, while this name may appeal to the high-brows, Katterjohn believes it hasn't a sufficient wallop to interest the general public, and he is just at present wrinkling over a suitable name.

The photography, which is said to be unusual, was done by L. Guy Wilky.

He Went It Alone.

It is the ambition of every motion-picture director to have the opportunity to make one big picture which completely follows out his own ideas, and is also made without any restraint from the business office. In signing his contract with the Paralta company, Reginald Barker stipulated that he should be given this opportunity. It was given to

Charlie Chaplin and his famous poses.

Good Reason Why.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN CALLS NEW PLAY "A DOG'S LIFE."

BY GRACE KINGSLEY.

THE child is born! The christening is over!

Charlie Chaplin, the world's most beloved film comedian, has named his first film child, and it is called, "A Dog's Life."

In less poetic language, Charlie Chaplin's first story for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit has "jelled," the picture is nearly finished, and he telegraphed the news of the christening to a waiting world, also to the F.N.E.C., last night.

Of course, the name is subject to remotely possible change. Naming a film is just as precarious as naming the first baby. You know when you name a baby Gladys or Ethel or Pansy, right off quick, you may suddenly be confronted by the accusing face of Aunt Elizabeth—and little Lizzie the child becomes at once. Or, grandmother may come on a visit and declare as soon as she sees the infant that it looks exactly as if its name would be Jennie, and Jennie the youngster becomes. But barring all slips and accidents, Charlie's first picture for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit will go into celluloid immortality as "A Dog's Life."

It is very fine to be known as a genius, and, of course, genius is always allowed to pop when it can. But don't imagine for a moment that the mighty little comedian is stalling during these final moments of his first picture. Though most of the real worry is over, he is still a knocker at the door of ideas, a seeker after comic lights. He doesn't lay off his work with his professional scenery. His lively brain is at it every moment he is awake.

"Why, he's even cut out going to Vernon to dance," said Brother Sid, as if that were the last word in asceticism. "The only relaxation he allows himself is an occasional evening with a friend or an hour with his violin. His violin—that seems to rest him most."

To be exact, Charlie hopes to be finished in four weeks. Here are the facts for the statistic hounds. Chaplin has been working five weeks, and has completed 60,000 feet of film. The story itself is practically complete. The climax is past, and Charlie expects to be finished, cutting, titling and all, within four weeks. But genius doesn't work with the meter on, so he isn't positive that it won't be five weeks. On the other hand, it may be only three.

After all, Charlie is really artistic triplets: he writes, directs and stars in all his own photoplays, and personally supervises the cutting.

Don't think for a minute that Charles Chaplin is stalling, you fans who are waiting eagerly for his next picture. He's an artist to his finger tips, is Charlie, with the genius' infinite capacity for taking infinite pains. Every bit of business is faithfully worked out, every "gag" is put to the supreme laugh test; every actor is rehearsed over and again. Chuck Reisner, who assists in writing the stories, is considered laugh-proof. If he laughs at a gag or a bit of business, it's a sure-fire hit.

Added to the difficulties of directing humans was that of directing canines. A number of dogs, big and little, are used in the picture; and if you think it's easy to get a pack of ki-yis to behave like regular actors, you just try it once; that's all. There were a mutt Mansfield, a Boston Bull Barrymore, a Russian beagle Booth, as the picture turns out—but not until Chaplin had become personally acquainted with each canine, had learned his idiosyncrasies, what he would do and what he would not do. The result is marvelous, one can vouch as eyewitness of the running off of a bit of film in the projection-room—but it wasn't accomplished without the sweating of blood.

Catch Charlie in the right mood and he'll do $10,000 worth of acting for you while you wait. So that, though following Charlie Chaplin around all day is as strenuous as following a soldier at drill, the similarity ends there.

After Chaplin has drawn on his funny trousers and shoes and his old shirt, in the privacy of his luxurious dressing-room, he finishes making up at a little dressing table on the stage, where he can keep an eye on the dressing of the sets. This happens around 9 o'clock, when the sun encourages photography.

"If I don't get this mustache on right, it's all off," grinned Charlie as he carefully combed the crepe and cut it, pasting it on his lip first as a big wad. "Got to trim that down, or Chester Conklin will think I'm trying to steal his stuff!"

I'm only one of many interviewers who call on Charlie, so he talks as he makes up:

"The day of sausage pictures is over," he said. Then he made an important announcement. "I shall never again bind myself to the making of two-reel comedies. You must have a story, and it's got to be a clear story. Otherwise quite naturally the public doesn't get it. Also you've got to have the gags and the jokes and the jazz. You've got to grab these out of the air, as if were. You don't know just when or where the ideas come from—and sometimes they don't!"

By the by, while one is not at liberty to reveal what they are, I saw some of the most brilliant bits of comedy worked up which ever went into a picture. Just to admit these bits of comedy were put over by Mr. Chaplin and Edna Purviance in a dance hall scene, isn't telling any secrets; and while the interviewer who is honorable (also who expects to get yet other stories) cannot reveal the plot, suffice it that one willingly stakes her reputation on the prophecy it will be far and away the best bet Chaplin has ever put on the market.

It's coming to be quite the fad to visit the Chaplin studio—that is, if you can get in. Of course, you know nobody is allowed to visit there. Nobody, that is, except picture magnates and newspaper and magazine representatives and their friends, and fellow artists—of whom there are always some thousands in the city—and all the soldiers and sailors and——.

But that's enough to show you what one of Charlie's days must be like. And he's the most astonishing combination of busy artist and gracious, good-natured host.

Charlie's make-up being on straight by now and his hat on crooked, he took a peep in his glass and descrying over his shoulders a bunch of soldiers, of course, he had to go over and say "Hello." Some dear ladies of the Red Cross just then entered, and, a candy company having contributed a whole shop full of chocolates for Charlie to auction off, he had to pause to be photographed before the collection with some of the Red Cross ladies.

I think Charlie gets most of his inspirations when he is "kidding." He wanted some special idea for that photograph, and he took a dozen different comical poses before, grasping a broom which lay on the set, he hit upon the right idea.

"The Chocolate Soldier!" he grinned, as he fell into a funny attitude with the broom as a gun.

Then the comedian went over to the dance hall set and called out to Miss Purviance and the other members of the company. He sat down beside the two cameras that are always ranged on the action, and he shut his eyes and put his fingers in his ears.

"That's the way he visualizes an idea," explained Brother Sid. "He sees it on the screen that way."

SCREEN.

Films.

ALL SORTS OF PICTURES.

A GREAT VARIETY IN THE GALLERY OF REELS.

Clune's Auditorium.

With tomorrow's matinee at Clune's Auditorium, Evelyn Nesbit will have made her screen debut in Los Angeles. Her first photoplay comes to the big theater on Olive street for its first western showing tomorrow. "Redemption," the title of the play, is based on the early life of its star, and her son, Russell Thaw, is cast in an important role. Evelyn Nesbit has always been considered a beautiful woman and in "Redemption" she more than bears out that reputation. Her gowns were the cause of considerable comment by the women of New York when the picture was shown at the George M. Cohan Theater. The concert by Clune's Auditorium Symphony Orchestra, in addition to the musical accompaniment of the feature, will include gems from Puccini masterpieces, "The Girl of the Golden West," "La Boheme," "Madame Butterfly" and "Manon Lescaut."

Grauman's.

That love and faith and the will to win can triumph over the fears and cravings of a man obsessed with the belief that he has inherited a taste for liquor and cannot escape the consequences is the story around which is woven the latest production starring Charles Ray, the Ince matinee idol, who appears at Grauman's in "The Family Skeleton" this week, beginning tomorrow. Ray is assisted by an able cast and those who have seen a pre-view of the film say it is one of the best the young Ince star has made since his elevation to leading roles. Grauman's thirty-five-piece symphony orchestra, directed by Rudolph G. Kopp, and Jesse Crawford at the organ, again are featured.

Miller's.

"Cheating the Public," Richard Stanton's picturization of Mary Murillo's story, "Responsibility," staged in Los Angeles, is William Fox's 1918 cinemelodramatic success, which is to open at Miller's today for a one-week's run. This is described as a timely, thrilling American story, the most soul-stirring melodrama the screen has ever known—a powerfully dramatic tale of business brutality and ruthlessness, interwoven with an expose of child-labor conditions and the heartless operations of a food profiteer—a picture rich in striking, realistic contrasts of poverty and luxury, of man's greed and woman's unselfishness. "Cheating the Public" is played by a cast of expert players, including Enid Markey, Ralph Lewis, Tom Wilson, Bertram Grassby, and so on.

Kinema.

That there is a vast gulf between the upper and lower realms of society is brought forth vividly, it is said, in Mary Pickford's joy-bringer, "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley," commencing a week's run today at the Kinema. That these two planes, socially, can never be successfully bridged is proven. From the time her Irish washerwoman mother tells the young alley debutante that "when swell guys come up here you want to find out if anywan's doin' their shirts," to the day when she announces: "I don't want to be a lady, I want to go home," to her dude admirer, the film is said to be rollicking and joyous—and psychological. Of course, "it takes a little rain with the sunshine" to make the world go round, and the public is also promised an opportunity to use their pocket handkerchiefs freely. After all, what is comedy but just the other side of tragedy?

Tally's Broadway.

"The Legion of Death," a seven-reel production of the Russian revolution, with particular attention to the part played by the women warriors of Russia, and with Edith Storey as the star, is the attraction featured at Tally's Broadway for next week. "The battalion of death," as they were called, stepped into the firing line to take the places of the men whose spirits had weakened and who had fled from the trenches. Many men were shamed, and all encouraged, by this gallant action, and returned to their posts. History does not contain the equal of this inspiring moment, except in the life of Joan of Arc, and Edith Storey is ideal for the part of the leader of Russia's women warriors. Great scenes of the conflict in Russia are shown, both of the rioting in the streets and the fighting on the battle front. "The Legion of Death" is a story filled with dramatic suspense and thrilling incidents.

Alhambra.

Tom Mix, the new Fox star, has gained the highest admiration of all picture fans because they all know what a splendid type of actor and man he is, and how well he can play the real hero of red blood and daring. But in his new picture, called "Six-Shooter Andy," which is to be shown at the Alhambra for a week beginning today, he is going to be at his best, and in a light that will fairly astonish his most ardent admirers. "Six-Shooter Andy" is a western play that is said to deal with a situation that is absolutely novel. The other feature on the new Alhambra programme is called "Columbia Calls," a pageant arranged and staged by Pasadena society folk for the Commission for Relief in Belgium.

Clune's Broadway.

Take a good motion-picture plot, stir in a few thrilling scenes connected with the blowing in of a "gusher" oil well, add the delightfully humorous situation of a man who has won through gambling the home of a girl he later learns to love, and you have the entertaining combination which Clune's Broadway will offer during the coming week in the shape of "The Turn of a Card," starting this afternoon, with J. Warren Kerrigan as the featured star. Mr. Kerrigan is called upon to do some very strenuous stunts in this picture. One of them requires him to wreck an automo-

OPERA IN ENGLISH.

THE BOSTON COMPANY WILL COME TO THE MASON.

If the musical taste of this city does not differ greatly from those of Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, St. Paul, St. Louis, Denver and San Francisco, the Mason will probably be the most popular place in Los Angeles the week of March 11, when the Boston English Opera Company comes here for an engagement in the language you can understand, at prices you can afford to pay.

This organization comes here direct from the Columbia Theater, San Francisco, following its four months run in Chicago, and has been acknowledged by press and public the finest English singing organization before the public today. Its cast of principals includes the foremost English singing artists on the American stage, who, together with a chorus of unusual excellence, comprise an ensemble such as one seldom hears nowadays.

With such artists as Joseph F. Sheehan, John W. Warren, Elaine De Sellem, Alice May Carley, Hazel Eden, Florentine St. Claire, Arthur Deane, Francis J. Tyler and a half dozen others of like prominence, and with a policy which prescribes that the prices must be within the reach of the masses, it is no wonder that the success of this organization has been the one unique outstanding feature of the theatrical season.

That this company, fresh from its laurels in Chicago, comes to the Mason, should be a matter of congratulation, for every music lover in this city. It is more than likely that there will be many more seeking admission to the Mason than the capacity of the house will accommodate, particularly when it is announced that the prices here are to be the same as in San Francisco, Chicago, and other large cities.

Frieda Hempel,

Coloratura soprano Metropolitan Opera Company, Trinity Auditorium, Tuesday evening, March 12.

Frieda Hempel Coming.

There are only three more concerts scheduled for the Philharmonic courses, and of these the one which has been the most heralded and probably the most eagerly anticipated, is the recital to be given by the lovely coloratura soprano, Frieda Hempel, on Tuesday evening, March 12, at Trinity Auditorium.

When Marcella Sembrich retired after her many years of success at the Metropolitan Opera House, it was predicted that she would never have a successor who was her equal. The following season Frieda Hempel made her debut, and so immediate was her success with both the press and public that she remained as one of the few really brilliant stars of this famous institution.

The Hempel voice is not strictly coloratura; she accomplishes the most astounding things in florid arias like those in "The Magic Flute" and "Lucia," but delights in the more dramatic roles, essaying with success even "Carmen" and "Faust." Her every appearance in opera proved her remarkable versatility; apparently no style is beyond her absolute control, as she excels in every role she sings.

It is by virtue of this versatility and a distinctly charming personality, that she has conquered in the realm of recital. Here, without the usual assets of orchestra, scenery, costumes and assisting artists, she has proven her right to be called the supreme soprano soloist in America today.

The programme will be a delight to every patron of music, whether layman or musician. The seldom heard but beautiful "Ernani Involami" aria will be the only selection from opera. "Theme and Variations," by Proch, and Miss Hempel's own arrangement of the "Blue Danube," will be the two other tests for her particular style of brilliant floritura. There will be two groups of songs in English, among these being Lehman's "Daddy's Sweetheart," an old Swedish folksong, "When I Was Seventeen," "My Curly-headed Baby," by Clutsam, "Phyllis Has Such Charming Graces," "On Wings of Song," "The Vain Suit," "Cradle Song" by Tschaikowsky, and Taubert's lovely "Bird Song."

Orpheus Club's Concert.

The Orpheus Club will give its concert of the season next Friday evening, March 8, at Trinity Auditorium.

Miss Harriet Pasmore, contralto, will be the principal soloist. This young lady is the daughter of H. B. Pasmore, one of the leading singing teachers of San Francisco; Miss Pasmore is a sister of the famous "Pasmore Trio," who toured the United States several years ago, and were pronounced by many leading critics as the foremost American trio. Miss Pasmore is a member of the faculty of Pomona College, being instructor in singing; her musicianship is thorough, for she is a pianiste of

The tea dance at the Alexandria on Saturday was very jolly. All the girls there with their soldier beaux, upon by the Los Angeles matrons. Mrs. Michael Connell, Ralph Williams, Mrs. A. L. Mrs. Samuel Storrow— indefatigable workers they are. Red Crossy ever finds them and they each and all have knack of making people enjoy themselves.

Jewish ladies are wonders, This week, you know, they had a "drive" for their Hebrew and set themselves to raise in three days, strictly from of their own faith. The consisted of Mesdames Levy, Van Behrendt, Adolf Joe Loeb, Stephen Low, L. Lewin and Miss Teresa They gave little Mrs. Lewin Jewish bankers to beard—and quite awful what she did to Messieurs Alvin Frank and Getz, for instance (encounter- a fierce offensive, surrendered and came through handsome tribute. This is the first charity drive the Jewish have made in this city, and they only approached the of their own race, many voluntarily contributed.

A gentleman from Chicago who Theda Bara in the long ago, into town and went to see "Cleopatra." "Fancy little Theodosia Goodman blossoming forth as a radiant Cleopatra," he said. "You know when she first broke into the show business she took the name of Theo Copee and played with Frances Wilson in "When Knighthood Was in Flower." He told us such a lot of interesting things about Theda—and all nice.

It was interesting to meet Mary Roberts Rinehart, who, you know, is on her way to Mexico for a hunting trip and has an arsenal along with her. Rifles and automatic revolvers are her pet playthings, but they do not prevent her having good taste in modish hats. She has done everything while here, including Vernon and the film studios. She is very animated and conversational, and tells a charming story about the Queen of Belgium, whom she met while over there, and who graciously offers and lights cigarettes for her lady visitors. Fancy having one's cigarette lighted by a Queen! Hugh Gibson did not tell us whether she lit one for him or not. Mrs. Rinehart says smoking is much more prevalent amongst women in the East, who have ceased to regard it as sporty.

Miss Mary Elizabeth Evans, who is traveling with Mrs. Rinehart, is a charming girl, and quite a celebrity, too, in her way. For she has become quite famous in New York as the proprietor of a stylish candy shop which is a regular social rendezvous, on Fifth avenue. And she does not look a bit aggressively business-like either. All the same some of those guns and hunting boots belonged to her and she won't be happy till she has a mountain lion to her credit.

We are all going out for that international golf match at the Los Angeles Country Club on Sunday, March 3rd. They begin playing at 1 p.m., and we mean to give them a fashionable gallery. Bob Cash, Jr., will be the American amateur, Norman Mabeth, the Scotch amateur, Artie Shafer, representing the United States Navy, Laurence Cowing, our former State champion, the United States Army (he is now a sergeant with the Grizzlies, you know) besides two distinguished professionals in Brady and George Martin. It is to be a genuine social event for the hostesses will be Mrs. Joseph Sartori, Mrs. Ralph Williams, Mrs. J. C. Black and Mrs. Frank Griffith, who will see that the heroes get properly spoiled after such strenuous exhibition of their talent.

So long, cherie! Your irrepressible,

BETTY.

SOCIETY.

BY VIRGINIA WOODS.

For an Army Man.

Maj. Robert Hartigan, U.S.A., stationed in the Philippines, who has just arrived in Los Angeles to join his family for a brief visit, was the inspiration for an elaborate dinner party at which Mrs. Hartigan was hostess on Friday afternoon and at which several distinguished army officers and their wives were guests. For this festive occasion, Mrs. Hartigan employed a wealth of pink rosebuds to center her table. Dinner was served at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and among the guests were Col. and Mrs. B. B. Ray, who are passing the winter at the Ansonia apartments. The Hartigans have taken a house at No. 4612 Maplewood avenue and for the most part are keeping rather quiet.

For Tacoma Girl.

Miss Margaret Jensen, a fascinating debutante from Tacoma, was the captivating reason for a gay bridge party and luncheon at which Miss Marie Scheller of No. 1301 St. Andrews place was hostess on Thursday afternoon. Spring blossoms in various colors brightened the card table at which a tempting repast was served. Twenty girls from the younger society set were present.

Officers' Naval Reserve Ball.

Naval officers in trig uniforms embellished in gold gave a dash and elegance to the officers' naval reserve ball, with which they formally opened Russel Hall at the harbor Friday evening. Among the large list of smart folk there, were members of the army and navy set at the Hotel Virginia, Long Beach, as well as numerous Los Angeles society folk. In one delightful party were Mrs. Stanley Sproul, Mrs. Jere Baxter, Jr., Miss Kathleen Kelly, Miss Mary Hillman, Miss Luzette Tilt, Miss Marion Sproul and Lieut. Maurice Kelly, and Lieut. William Anderson of the British naval air service, all of whom motored down from Long Beach for the event. Capt. and Mrs. J. C. Cantwell, Lieut. and Mrs. J. S. Hall and Lieut. and Mrs. William Maxwell were among others of the army and navy set there from the Hotel Virginia.

Mrs. Montague Ward entertained a merry party and so did Lieutenant-Commander and Mrs. Joseph L. Nielson.

Secret Wedding.

Although their wedding took place three weeks ago, it was not until yesterday that the marriage of Miss Ruth Gray and Horace Lukins, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Lukins of No. 349 South Verdugo road, became known to a number of their friends. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Gray of No. 425 Verdugo road, Glendale, and is a niece of Mayor Woodman. Mr. Lukins is in his sophomore year and pitcher on the baseball team at Throop College and is spending the week-end with his bride.

Miss Sturdivant to Marry.

The wedding of Miss Mary Sturdivant, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Sturdivant of No. 610 Woodland road, to Lieut. Charles E. Stimson, son of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Stimson of No. 20 Oak Grove avenue, Pasadena, will take place in San Francisco just as soon as it is the pleasure of the government to allow him the privilege of setting a date for the event.

Because it seemed impossible for the young lieutenant of artillery to obtain leave of absence of a sufficient length of time to make the trip to Pasadena, the bride-to-be left for San Francisco and will there await the orders of the government to name her wedding day. The ceremony is expected to take place at the Fairmont Hotel at any time.

Dinner Party.

A dainty arrangement of freesias and ferns were used as table decorations at a dinner party at which Mrs. O. H. Churchill was hostess Friday evening. Covers marked places for eight guests.

Fraternity Tea.

The California Gamma Chapter of the Pi Beta Phi fraternity gave a charming tea yesterday afternoon at the fraternity house, No. 745 West Twenty-eight street, in compliment to the Los Angeles Alumni Club. A delightful programme was rendered and the guests of honor were Misses Jane Walker, Melba, Virginia and Margaret Wood and Mary Barrett.

Vaudeville and Ball.

Plans for the success of the supper dance, vaudeville and ball to be given at the Hotel Huntington next Thursday evening, have taken on such huge proportions that nothing but a triumph for the patronesses seems possible. Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Stewart are going to entertain Mr. and Mrs. Michael Connell and Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Clark, Jr., while Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Bryant will have for supper guests, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Schweppe.

Among the other additional table reservations is that of Mrs. Frederick Stevens, who will entertain a big party of sixteen guests. Mrs. Joseph Hixon will also have sixteen, while Mrs. George Cruikshank is making preparations for ten. Mrs. William May Garland and Mrs. Harold Ayer will each have eight at their tables while Mrs. Samuel Storrow will have six, and Mrs. Bartlett Shideler will give a party for four.

Among the patronesses of the evening are Mesdames E. H. Moulton, Michael J. Connell, L. M. Danziger, Willoughby Rodman, Joseph H. Johnson, Paul Pitner, J. J. Hunker, R. I. Rogers, W. A. Luncheon Party.

Complimenting her sister-in-law, Mrs. O. E. Foulkes and Miss Frances Askran, both of Wichita, Kan., Mrs. James E. Foulke assembled a group of intimate friends at luncheon on Wednesday. Pink carnations were used for decorations and covers marked places for Mmes. J. Peterson, P. Enkelbretson, Arch Kellogg, Edward Britt, D. S. Grove, Harry Peck and Misses Dorothy Foulke and Janes Kellogg, the hostess and honorees.

By Mr. and Mrs. Brunswig.

The drawing-rooms of Mr. and Mrs. L. N. Brunswig of No. 3528 West Adams street will be the scene this evening of a fashionable gathering, when members of the Salon Francais assemble to enjoy a literary treat in the rendition of Maurice Barres's great conference, "The Heroism of France in the War," presented by Madame Marguerite Chenu, delegate of the "Union des Femmes de France," Paris. Subscribers to the series of conferences given by Madame Chenu are expected to be guests at this evening's affair, and lovers of French literature and of the French nation will appreciate this especial occasion. The lecture, which will begin at 8:15 o'clock, will be followed by music and social entertainment.

Hostess at Two Luncheon Parties.

The Mary Elizabeth tearooms furnished a charmingly intimate setting for two lovely luncheons at which Mrs. George Goldsmith was hostess on Friday and yesterday. For the affair of Friday she had as honorees Mrs. Morton J. May and Mrs. Thomas May of St. Louis, choosing for table appointments an exquisite combination of La France roses and violets. At yesterday's luncheon, at which her honor guests included Mrs. Morris Meyerfeld and Mrs. Florence Schloss, pansies, violets and acacia arranged in a low basket were used to brighten the table.

Dinner Dance.

Mrs. W. B. Loftus of No. 3107 Fourth avenue was hostess Tuesday evening at a jolly dinner and dancing party for a number of her young friends.

By Mrs. Solano.

Mrs. Alfred Solano, who is the house guest of her sister, Mrs. Frederick Stevens, entertained a company of friends at luncheon on Tuesday at the Midwick Country Club.

Studio Musicale.

Madame Gloria Mayne has issued invitations for a studio musicale this afternoon from 5 o'clock until 7 o'clock, in honor of Mrs. Clara Francis Mabery of Mabery Heights and Mrs. Ruth Graham, a talented danseuse of New York City. Madame Mayne will be assisted by her sister, Mrs. Philip Shanahan, and by Mrs. Elsa Newton.

For Miss Du Cros.

Miss Leslie-Leigh du Cros, a vivacious young newspaper woman from New Orleans, was guest of honor at a smart little dinner party on Friday evening at which Mrs. George B. Frasch was hostess. Miss Du Cros is returning to New Orleans today. Last evening she was a belle at the poppy ball given at the Hotel Maryland in Pasadena. She has been the house guest of Mrs. Frasch for a couple of weeks.

Pi Beta Phi.

The active chapter of the Pi Beta Phi of the University of Southern California entertained their alumni at a reception at the fraternity house, at No. 745 West Twenty-eighth street, yesterday. The most pleasing feature of the affair was the one-act play given by Miss Margaret Griffin and Miss Gertrude Rothe. The active members of the chapter present are Misses Ada Parish, Virginia Wood, Margaret Wood, Elizabeth Snyder, Jessie Grieve, Grace Witherel, Frieda Marten, Annie Laurie McDonald, Margaret Porter, Irene St. Riece, Lucile Greenleaf, Grace Chapman, Violet Stuart, Helen Avery, Margaret Wingert, Virginia Hoffman, Margaret Strause, Jane Walker, Marguerite Giffen,

ANNABELLE AND OTHERS

AT MOROSCO, MASON, ORPHEUM AND ELSEWHERE.

Morosco.

Oliver Morosco has established a definite policy of providing laughter for his patrons for the rest of the war. In an interview in the East, Mr. Morosco stated that he believes the world requires more laughter this year than at any other time in its history, to counteract, in a small way, the burden of anxiety that results from the daily perusal of the war news. With this in view Morosco will offer at the Morosco Theater, beginning with today's matinee, "Good Gracious Annabelle," a play of joy and laughter that rocked New York with mirth for an entire season. This will be the first time that "Good Gracious Annabelle" has been seen in the West. The story of "Good Gracious Annabelle" deals with the peculiar and intensely comical situations and predicaments in which a young woman finds herself. It was written by Clare Kummer. Bertha Mann will play the name role made famous by Phoebe Foster.

Mason.

To make folks happy has ever been the mission of May Robson, who will be starred in this city by Augustus Pitou in her latest melodramatic farce, "A Little Bit Old-fashioned," at the Mason, beginning tomorrow night. The play is by Anna Nichols. Playgoers who remember Miss Robson as the frolicsome old New England aunt in "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," have a treat in store in the coming of "A Little Bit Old-fashioned," in which she plays the title role. The star's wit, her clever and realistic conception of all the fun and humor in the situations of the comedy, which contains a charming love story, will carry this piece straight to the hearts of the audience. The play is clean, wholesome and uproariously funny, affording the sort of entertainment that is only too rare upon the stage.

Orpheum.

The mere mention of the name of Emma Carus, who heads the all-new Orpheum bill, opening Monday matinee, March 4, is enough in itself to center interest on that affair in a most unusual manner. Whether in musical comedy or in her favorite vaudeville field, Miss Carus has shone exclusively as a star; in fact, she seems to have had no preliminary period, but always has been recognized as of stellar rank. She has been a pronounced success in every one of her undertakings, and in vaudeville, she could play forever if she did not now and then break away into other lines. Another great girl on the new bill is Roth Toyek, a tiny bit of femininity, who is recognized as a sort of princess of ragtime. Stan Stanley is known as the bouncing fellow, but that is camouflage for other things. The Washington Square players present an unusual playlet, "Love Thy Neighbor." Felix Bernard and Eddie Janis have a musical act. The Valanova troupe of real gypsies present "A Night in the Gypsy Camp," and Herr Apdale offers his zoological circus. The Four Marx Brothers and company in "Home Again" are the only holdovers. A special feature of the new bill will be the first professional appearance of Frank Terramorse of the United States Naval Reserve, now at San Pedro, the "jack tar" tenor.

Pantages.

Possessors of flivvers will doubtless flock to Pantages this coming week to see Harry Langdon and company presenting their auto comedy skit entitled "Johnny's New Car," in which is pictured in graphic and ludicrous reality the troubles of owning a wild and woolly jitney. Langdon's act will be the headliner of the coming bill. Rosa Rosalind probably deserves second place on the bill, for her daring equestrienne act is little short of a sensation. Dixie Harris, a dainty singing comedienne, brings colorful new costumes and lively melodies. Fred Jarvis and Fredericka Harrison will present a comedy skit called "Shooting the Shoots." The Cortez Trio will bring to Los Angeles the kind of music that vaudeville fans like to listen to. George and Tony Florenz will figure in clever acrobatic feats.

Burbank.

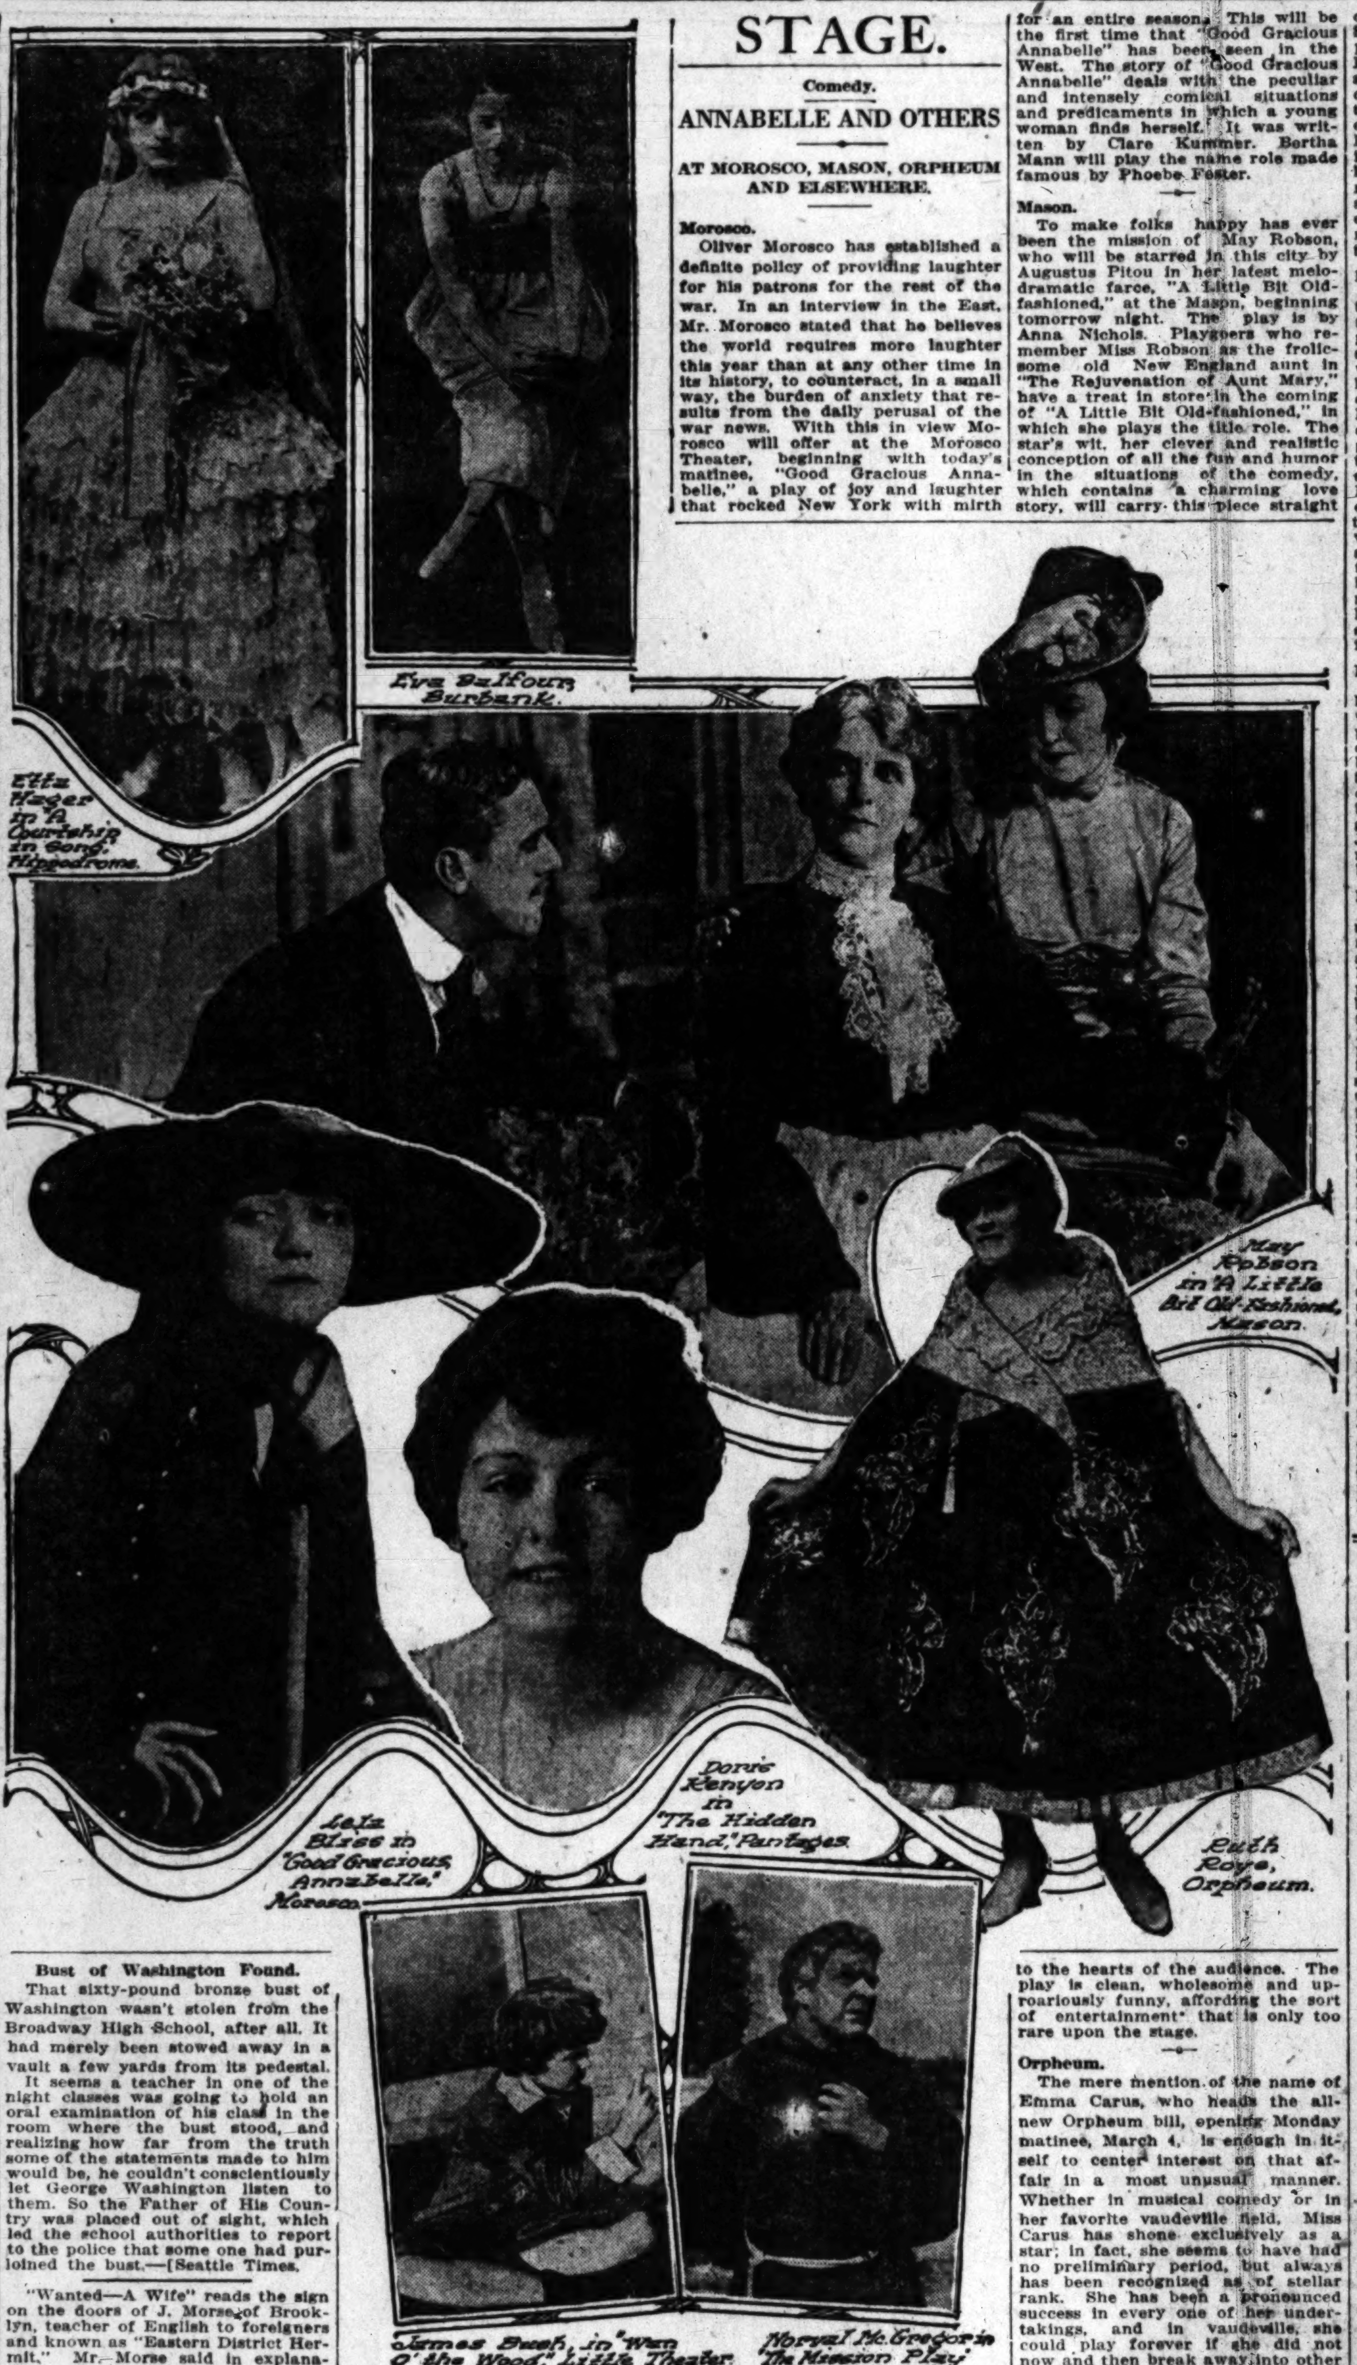
"Art Statuary Brought to Life," heads the bill at the Burbank this week. Another good act on the new programme, is Fred and Bess Lucier's hilarious skit, entitled "Just Funny Folks." MacMahon and Schoemer are seen in a vaudeville oddity. The Roys present "Jubilee in Darktown." Harrington and Lane give an act called "The Eccentric Janitor." Tom Galloway, Dixieland's minstrel man, will also grace the new bill.

Hippodrome.

As regards their capability in making people laugh, Minerva Courtney, Harry Irwin and Ollie Mack are all tried and true performers. Beginning Monday matinee, they will present "Heart o' the Canyon." A hummer from the word go is the imitation of Charlie Chaplin which Dedic Velde of the Dedic Velde company gives. "A Gale of Merriment" is the title of the musical comedy skit of the Three Millards. Walman and Berry and their violin and piano oblige the audience with any musical number called for. DeForest Brothers and Falk sing and dance. Charles Orr and Etta Hager are seen in a novelty high-class singing act. "Ingersoll" is a woe-begone looking little Welsh terrier that is the star of the skit of Mae and Billy Earle.

"Mission Play."

The "Mission Play," at San Gabriel, is a pageant drama which presents, by means of both pageantry and stirring drama, the sublime story of the founding of the white man's Christianity and civilization on the shores of Western America. Dr. Henry Van Dyke, pre-eminent among litterateurs, has pronounced the "Mission Play" to be the greatest of the world's pageant dramas. The "Mission Play" has been called "the Oberammergau of America," but it is really a different story. While it is vibrant with the same faith and lofty sentiment that pervades the Passion Play it is different in that it is joyous with color.



Eva Balfour, Burbank.
Etta Hager in "A Courtship in Song," Hippodrome.
May Robson in "A Little Bit Old-Fashioned," Mason.
Lela Bliss in "Good Gracious Annabelle," Morosco.

Bust of Washington Found.

That sixty-pound bronze bust of Washington wasn't stolen from the Broadway High School, after all. It had merely been stowed away in a vault a few yards from its pedestal.

It seems a teacher in one of the night classes was going to hold an oral examination of his class in the room where the bust stood, and realizing how far from the truth some of the statements made to him would be, he couldn't conscientiously let George Washington listen to them. So the Father of His Country was placed out of sight, which led the school authorities to report to the police that some one had purloined the bust.—[Seattle Times.

"Wanted—A Wife" reads the sign on the doors of J. Morse of Brooklyn, teacher of English to foreigners and known as "Eastern District Hermit." Mr. Morse said in explanation: "I want a wife who will be a companion to me in this ghetto; one who will help me to teach; one who will be my inspiration. I live in poverty and a wealthy wife could help me carry on my work."

SOCIETY.

Bible class of the Pico Heights Methodist Church, who came in a body, bringing handsome gifts of gold. The Bible class, however, of which Mr. DeWitt is a member, presented the couple with a beautiful bound Bible.

Mr. and Mrs. DeWitt were assisted in receiving by their four daughters, Misses Grace, Myrtle, Blanche and Ethel DeWitt and eleven old Illinois acquaintances. Throughout the house the decorations were carried out in great sprays of acacia blossoms, jonquils and marigolds, arranged with ferns and palms, forming a charming setting for the couple and setting off the handsome dahlia silk gown of Mrs. DeWitt. The refreshments were dainty and were served in elaborate fashion. All during the reception, which laster from 2 o'clock until 5 o'clock, there were music and other forms of entertainment. From out of town the following guests were present: Dr. and Mrs. J. S. Allen of Keithburg, Ill., Mr. and Mrs. Paul DeWitt of Long Beach, Mrs. George Tomlinson and Mrs. George Bates, of Santa Barbara, and Miss Edith Carlson, of Alhambra. Mr. DeWitt fought in the Civil War, and was a member of Co. B, No. One Hundred and Second, Illinois Regiment.

At Cards.

Jonquils and frezias centered the luncheon table at which Mrs. Charles V. Boquist entertained members of her card club last Wednesday. Covers marked places for Mmes. Alice Riviere, George H. Cornell, Henry Knight, Thomas Jones, C. S. Palkebstrom, Jack L. Thompson and Edward Ahrens.

From St. Louis.

Many functions are being given for a party of St. Louis folk who are touring Southern California, following a trip to Honolulu and San Francisco. The personnel includes Mrs. John Klein and daughter, Mrs. P. Bluehardt, Mrs. Fred Papendick and Miss Lucille Papendick, a charming debutante, Mrs. H. C. Meister and her nephew, Mr. Walter Meister. The party composed the honor guests at an elaborate luncheon at which Mrs. Charles Gildehaus of Pasadena was hostess yesterday and they were also the complimented guests at a tea, over which Mrs. Anthony Sutter of Venice presided on Monday. Mr. and Mrs. F. Tiemann of Santa Monica gave them a dinner during the week which was followed by a motor trip to Long Beach.

The party is domiciled at Hotel Clark. Mrs. Klein and Mrs. Bluehardt will remain two months longer.

Dinner for Diplomat.

Mesdames D. G. Stephens, Margaret Frick and A. C. Bilicke were the hostesses at a "friendship" dinner given to Hugh Gibson, the diplomat, in the ballroom of the Alexandria on Saturday evening, February 23. It was an occasion of genuine good-fellowship and stirring patriotism. There were 354 at the table, and when Mr. Gibson arose to speak, he received an extraordinary ovation. He delivered a forceful address, reciting the brutal blunders of the Germans at Louvain, in the sinking of the Lusitania, in the execution of Miss Cavell, and the execution of Capt. Frye. He also related his personal observations of the hatred in which the Americans were held in Berlin before the United States declared war against Germany. At the close of the address each guest grasped him by the hand and wished him God speed and a safe return. Mr. Gibson started on his mission to Paris the following morning.

Society Pageant in Films.

One of the events of the social season is the first public showing today at the Alhambra Theater, of "Columbia's Call," society's pantomime pageant film production enacted by Los Angeles' smart set for the benefit of the Belgium Relief. This production was staged around the beautiful home of Mrs. A. C. Bilicke and was written by Miss Miriam Meredith. Those who were instrumental in arranging for this benefit are Mrs. Willoughby Rodman, Mrs. Mitchel Creamer, Mrs. Norman Macbeth, Madame De Lacrena, Mrs. John Lynch, Mrs. John Treanor and Mrs. J. J. Martin.

The cast is made up of many socially prominent people of Los Angeles and Pasadena. The younger set too, is well represented as hundreds are in the allegorical "Spear," and "Arrow" dances. The costumes are especially striking and the setting of the Bilicke gardens makes the scenes elaborate. The film production is in three episodes, entitled "The Joys of Peace," "The Coming of War" and "The Spirit of Service Comes to Women." The thought and action of the whole allegory is timely and shows how great is woman's part in this war.

The choir of St. Pauls Pro-Cathedral is shown in one of the scenes and the sponsors for the affair in another. Those in the cast include: Miss Julanne Johnson, Miss Leota Lorraine, Miss Nita Sunderland, Miss Laura Love, Miss Nellie Abbott, Miss Elizabeth John, Mrs. Jack Spahr, Miss Marjorie Riley, Mrs. George Reed, Mr. Don Francisco, Miss Edna Mae Wilson, Mrs. Ruth Hall Kennedy, Mrs. Norman Macbeth, Miss Marjorie Blinn, Mrs. Harry Logan, Miss Tayo Hayasake, Miss Elizabeth Sturdevant Mrs. Barnes, Mrs. William Carey Marble, Miss Dorothy Remelin, Mrs. J. P. Fisher, Miss Irene Combe, Miss Florence Brown, Miss Beatrice Fox, Miss Lucile Evans, Mrs. Irwin Johnstone Muma and John Rothbury Muma. Miss Isabel Percival is stage manager for the production.

Spring Footwear Revue

The most popular types of footwear for the Spring season—the "selling styles"—will be Boots, Oxfords and Pumps.

In high shoes, plain, rich effects will predominate for smart wear. This tendency to plainness and elegant simplicity also holds true for low cuts, especially Oxfords.

Frills and fancies, such as lace stays, trimmings and filigrees, are the exception rather than the rule.

The predominating colors in smart boots will be white, gray and two-tone browns. Low-heeled welt boots and Oxfords will also be a feature of Spring styles. These appear largely in white, and also in tan Russia leathers.

At the present moment, Oxfords are the reigning vogue. They are of dainty, light construction with high, full, Louis heels. This house is now showing this type of footwear for early Spring in many distinctive and original designs. We are, however, confining our offerings strictly to plain, rich effects. The quality and aristocratic daintiness of the footwear will appeal to discriminating women.

Our assemblage of smart Spring Oxfords includes patent leather, black kid, dark brown kid, tan Russia, gray kid, white kid and buckskin effects.

Pumps will be in greater vogue this season than they have been for many years. And, after all, there is no other type of footwear that quite takes the place of the plain, rich, glove-fitting Pump—for daintiness, grace and the trimness it lends to the foot. The Pump is truly in a class alone.

Oxfords and Pumps $5 to $12.

The Wrist Watch in War

War today is scientific—even the movements on the battlefield are timed, succees depends on securing uniform action at the proper time. When orders come—"go over the top"—it is timed to the second—and the time is set by a military watch. A military watch must be of strong construction and an accurate time-keeper—the safety of the boys depends on this. Each one shown here has been selected for these qualities—they are dependable. We will gladly show you many very fine military wrist watches—a most unusual selection.

MODART CORSETS
Front Laced

Insure Continuous Figure Improvement

The "better dressed" woman is selecting a Modart Front Laced Corset this season. As in the past, her purchase is made with more pleasure than any other article of her wearing apparel.

The event with her is far more than the mere purchase of a corset. It is a sound investment in figure improvement.

All Modart Corsets are designed and sold on a basis of the figure-improving service they render. To sell corsets simply as corsets has never been our purpose.

The hundreds of women who wear Modart Corsets know this. They buy the Modart because of this service. Experience has demonstrated to them that each Modart worn continues to improve the figure. This improvement is constantly maintained, for the corset is designed to hold its shape until worn out. Modart wearers remain Modart wearers year after year.

To create and fix such service in a corset, the very highest designing skill is employed. As a consequence the finest materials and the best workmanship possible must be used. These are reasons why Modart values are always unusual and why women willingly pay $5.00 and up for this superior corset.

Modart Corsets are Always Front Laced. Our experience has proved to us that Front Lacing is the correct idea in corseting and that the properly designed Front Laced corset offers greater opportunities for visible figure improvements than any other type.

We invite you to make the "Test of Tests"—a Trial Fitting. Our corsetieres will render this service without obligation on your part to purchase. When you have made the test, we believe you will not care to be without a Modart.

Do not hesitate to ask for your Trial Fitting. It will be gladly given you by our experienced corsetieres who thoroughly understand the Modart idea and will advise you how to wear your Modart so you will get the utmost out of its wonderful figure-improving qualities.

A Lesson from "The Fashion Show"

TO those who availed themselves of the opportunity afforded by the Fashion Show to observe, compare and conclude, the superiority in character of the home furnishing shown by the "California" must have been very obvious.

And to those who compared prices, the genuineness of the values offered by the "California" could not have been otherwise than convincing, for everything here is marked in plain figures at the absolutely lowest price which every buying advantage and close-margin selling can make possible.

Among manufacturers, we enjoy the reputation of being among the most critical, exacting buyers in America. We believe that right buying is essential to right selling.

All our selections are, therefore, personally made by the principals of this institution with the one ideal in mind—that only the best that is produced is good enough for the "California" and the "California's" patrons.

Those who did not visit the "California" during Fashion Show Days are cordially invited to do so at their convenience—to see and study the new and advanced ideas in furnishings for the home. Every day in the year is "Fashion Show" day at the "California."

Our special Fashion Show window displays, which have been most favorably commented upon, will remain intact throughout this week for the benefit of those who have not seen them.

Exquisite Cameos

Some de luxe importations.

The appearance of every fashionable Spring costume will be enhanced by wearing one of the charming new conceptions in coral, stone or shell cameos now being shown by this house.

Never before has it been our privilege to show so many beautiful pieces in this new type of jewelry which has always been in vogue and which will never be out of style. A description of these beautiful masterpieces would be futile in this space. They were exhibited in our fashion show windows and described by the fashion writers in the newspapers. But you must see them at close range to appreciate their charm and distinction.

BIG DUAL ROLE in Stella Maris

Mary Pickford outshines the brilliancy of every past cinema achievement in her Artcraft triumph, "Stella Maris."

In this screen masterpiece there are two Mary Pickfords, in different characters of extreme contrast—shown on the screen at the same time.

You see her as Stella Maris, a child of luxury basking in sunshine with the golden curls and pretty frocks for which "Little Mary" is famous—and you see her as Unity Blake—a slavey from the orphanage—dirty of face, ungainly of gait, and whose life is just one shadow after the other.

"Stella Maris" is a narrative of sublime pathos and charm, which lends itself well to the rare talents of "America's Sweetheart."

You'll thrill and throb over "The Marked Pack," a dashing, smashing Thomas H. Ince master drama, specially tailored for William S. Hart.

You'll laugh yourself sick over "The House That Jack Built," a brand new Christie comedy that is poison gas to all glooms.

"Our South American Countries" will be the subject of a discourse by Dr. W. F. Rice, former president of the Santiago de Chile College, before the Woman's City Club tomorrow. The whole programme for March promises much interest. On the 11th, Mme. "Godmothering a Soldier."

The Cosmos Club will present a clever little comedy, under the direction of Lillian Burkhart Goldsmith, written by Florence Haynes Reed, on next Wednesday at the Ebell Clubhouse. Members of the club will make up the dramatics personae, aided by James Bush, the boy actor. Mrs. Reed herself will play the part of Pearl Moreland, a wealthy girl "with nothing to do," and Mrs. Gertrude Fallamsbee will play "Mrs. Potter," the club woman in charge of the Red Cross knitting room, by which it will be seen the subject of the play is highly topical. Jacques Sindore has been persuaded to take the part of the young soldier who enjoys so much godmothering.

Miss Katherine Marshall was responsible for a charming group of songs which formed the programme of the last meeting, in addition to Mrs. Goldsmith's lecture on "The Book of Job."

P.T.A. Federation.

The Los Angeles Federation of P.T.A. held a board meeting on Wednesday, when plans were made for raising funds for the erection of a building in Washington, under the supervision of the National Congress of Mothers and P.T.A., where the boys in the army may enjoy comforts during their stay there.

The following names were presented and indorsed to be placed on the ballot for the coming election in May: President, Mrs. Charles F. Gray—now chairman of the council of presidents; second vice-president, Mrs. Robert Killifer, now federation chairman of scholarship; fourth vice-president, Mrs. Harry Crebs, now chairman of hospitality; treasurer, Mrs. A. L. Colby, incumbent; corresponding secretary, Mrs. L. W. Hendricks, incumbent; historian, Mrs. Mable Yoerk. Remaining officers serve for another year under the by-laws.

Mrs. H. V. Davis put forward the name of Mrs. H. T. Wright as nominee for office of president of the first district, which was unanimously indorsed. The meeting concluded with a talk on good films by Mrs. M. C. Greening. The next regular meeting will be held in Fraternal Brotherhood Hall, on the 7th inst., Mrs. C. C. Noble in the chair.

West Ebell.

A musical programme gave the West Ebell much pleasure last Tuesday morning when Miss Lois Brown, a promising young pianist, gave a pleasing interpretation of Chopin's "Nocturne in G" and "Polonaise in A."

Mrs. E. B. Weirick spoke on "Federation Social Service and the Big Sister League," in which she has become enthusiastically interested. Her appeal for support of this institution for the salvation and reinstatement of unfortunate girls, met with sympathetic response.

At Hollywood.

Miss Beulah Marie Dix, author of several successful plays, was the speaker at the last regular meeting at the Hollywood Woman's Club. She is at present in the scenario department at the Lasky studio, and her subject "Why Write Photoplays?" was therefore doubly interesting, and cleverly handled.

The public affairs meeting of the club has changed its next date to March 12. Miss Mertice McCrea will give the programme next Wednesday, taking for her subject "The Education of the Handicapped," and the public will be admitted. The art section will give a luncheon on the 6th inst., at which Ernest Batchelder of Pasadena will talk on "The Quest of the Beautiful." Mrs. George Lomax of Chicago and Miss Leta Horlocker will also be guests.

L. A. Travel Club.

Dr. Paul Edwards, who has traveled extensively in Russia, will address the Los Angeles Travel Club tomorrow, Monday afternoon, at the Brack Shops, when, under the general heading of "Russian Art," several club members will contribute papers.

"Hoover Food Conditions" was the subject of a talk by Mrs. Seward A. Simons at the last meeting, followed by the unison singing of patriotic airs, and a humorous reading by Mrs. E. J. Cookins. A card party is being planned for the 12th inst., for the benefit of the Red Cross.

Wednesday Morning Club.

The music section gave the programme at the Wednesday Morning Club on last Wednesday, when the chorus proved itself eminently efficient in the singing of several songs, and Mrs. Harold Bailey and Miss Mildred Campbell contributed some pleasing solos. Mrs. Paul Zhan gave a solo from "Madame Butterfly," and Mrs. John Hatch a spring song. Mrs. M. E. Johnson, the president, preceded the programme with a strong plea for support of the Y.W.C.A. campaign.

Next Wednesday's programme will be given by Mrs. Kiyo Sue Inui, who will exhibit and explain Japanese art.

Ebell's Coming Programmes.

On Thursday next the social science section of the Ebell Club will discuss the general topic of "Education as a Factor in the World War," and Mrs. F. Johnson will read Will Levington Comfort's "Child and Country." Mme. K. S. Inui will speak on the "Americanization of the Japanese Child."

Tomorrow afternoon, the club will hear the young pianist, Desider Jósef Vecsie and Mme. Anna Sprotti in a first-class musical programme. The Browning study class will meet in the morning, when Mrs. Thomas R. Coles will contribute a reading "Pompilia's Child, What of His Future?"

At Owensmouth.

The Owensmouth Woman's Club will hold its annual Easter sunrise concert in the Greek theater of the Owensmouth High School on Easter morning, the 31st inst., and it is making elaborate plans for the presentation of the best possible talent for the occasion.

Mother's Educational Center.

Dr. Maude Wilde, who has directed the Mother's Educational Center in the Chamber of Commerce, devotes her life to child welfare, made a rousing appeal for enthusiastic support at the national orange show last Saturday afternoon. She spoke nationally and the men in the audience were prompt to respond to her appeal. Over 1300 mothers have availed themselves of the services of the staff of generous women physicians who lend their skill to this center.

Highland Park Ebell.

Miss Jessica Walker's song recital proved a happy success at the Highland Park Ebell on Tuesday, for she has a rich, sweet voice that won her hearers to loud and long applause. Miss Penelope Cuthbert was her accompanist.

The current events section met in the afternoon, when Mrs. M. C. Dawn read an instructive paper on the railroads and Mrs. Jane Beatty summed up the events of the hour, particularly in Russia and Ireland.

Members of the club will give next Tuesday's programme, when Mrs. H. M. Fultz will tell some Chinese legends and Mrs. L. Holmes Miller will present Slav dances.

California Badger Club.

Mrs. G. E. Desborough and Miss Rene Cathcart will be the speakers at the luncheon of the Badger Club on Wednesday, the work of the Y.W.C.A. and Americanization being their respective subjects. The afternoon programme will be the presentation of a playlet by the Galpin Shakespeare Club, entitled, "The Downfall of King Alcohol." Unison singing will be led by George G. Congdon.

A Washington Programme.

A patriotic entertainment in honor of Washington and Lincoln was given by Bartlett-Logan Post and Corps, February 22, at Patriotic Hall, No. 1816 South Figueroa street.

The Washington period was represented by two tableaux showing Washington and his mother, when he was about to leave to assume his duties as President of the United States; reading, "The Minuet," by Phyllis Ford, followed by the dance of the minuet by Phyllis Ford, Ruth Lockridge, Hazel Miller and Hazel La Pierre.

The Lincoln period was represented by five tableaux: Lincoln, the student, the rail splitter, the emancipator, granting a pardon, and Lincoln the martyr. Comrade J. W. Van Horn gave an unusually good representation of Lincoln as a man.

R. H. Mouser (Bill Stinger) was the speaker of the evening, and his remarks and readings were greatly enjoyed.

At Redondo.

The annual election of officers was the business of most importance at the last regular meeting of the Civic Outlook Club of Redondo Beach and resulted as follows: President, Mrs. W. L. Adkins; vice-president, Mrs. E. J. Scott; secretary, Mrs. C. W. Alverson; treasurer, Miss Lucy Whichels; federation secretary, Mrs. W. A. Galentine. None of these are re-elections, as all those holding office positively refused to be nominated again for those same offices, Mrs. W. A. Galentine having completed six years as president, Mrs. Gabriel Johnston four years as treasurer and Mrs. W. L. Adkins, the newly-elected president, over three years as secretary; Miss Lois Craig having taken Mrs. Adkins place the past few months when Mrs. Adkins was compelled to give up the work.

Following the business meeting, Mrs. Galentine gave a report of the district federation convention at Santa Barbara and the meeting closed with a salute to the flag.

At Glendale.

The regular meeting of the Tuesday Afternoon Club was given up to reports of delegates from the federation convention at Santa Barbara. Mrs. Blake Franklin told of the speakers and their subjects, while Mrs. Menzo Williams gave an entertaining report of the social side. Mrs. H. S. Duffield gave a review of the musical features, and a tribute to that able administrator of whom the Glendale Club is so proud, Mrs. Mattison B. Jones.

After the reports an informal programme was given, Mrs. Grover Cable reading several numbers and Mrs. H. R. Boyer playing two piano solos of her own composition. The meeting closed with the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner," with Mrs. H. E. Bartlett at the piano.

At the regular meeting of the Glendale branch of the British Ambulance Society business of various sorts was enacted, including the giving in of financial reports of the Valentine dance, which netted $70, and of the sale of the Allies' fiesta pin, half of the proceeds of which are to be donated to the Y.M.C.A. at Camp Kearny. The date was set as March 7 for a meeting to be held at the High School, at which Dr. Henry V. Boddington will be a speaker and also one of the officers from the British recruiting station. It was decided to make the tea to be held tomorrow a special occasion, when a musical programme will be given, at which Miss Alice Crawford Fawcett of Pasadena will be the singer. The hostesses will be the Tea Committee, Miss Ina Whitaker, Mrs. John Hornsey, Mrs. E. W. Pack and Mrs. Edward Malley.

Audubon Society.

The Audubon Society will hold its next field day on Thursday in Laughlin Park, when Mrs. Joseph Anthony will be leader. Members and others interested will meet at the entrance of the park at 9 a.m.

On the 21st inst. Mrs. Sloane-Orcutt will address an indoor meeting of the society at Exposition Park in the State Building. As the only woman Park Commissioner she will have some interesting things to tell of her work, especially improvements effected in the past year.

New Political Club.

Thomas Lee Woolwine has reached the distinction of having a woman's club formed to indorse his candidature for Governor of California. They call themselves the Woman's Woolwine-for-Governor Club and will hold a nonpartisan meeting tomorrow, at 2:30 p.m., at No. 629 Merchants' National Bank Building, when they expect delegates of women from all parties and organizations, and officers are to be chosen and elected.

Women's University Club.

The Women's University Club is already organized for the third Liberty Loan drive and has appointed Mrs. Charles Melson, Mrs. Martha Kramer and Mrs. S. C. Dunlap as a committee for that purpose. Mrs. Birney Donnell, the president, has called a meeting of all the A.C.A. clubs for May 1 in this city to unify the work of these organizations. A State councillor will be elected whose duty it will be to visit all the organizations and co-ordinate definite work.

U.S.C. Alumnae Club.

The alumnae section of the Woman's Club of U.S.C. held its February meeting on last Saturday afternoon in the Woman's University Club room in the Brack-Shops.

One of the most delightful programmes that the club has enjoyed was given by two of its members, Miss Flora Cronemiller and Miss Evelyn Miller. Miss Cronemiller sang two selections by Cadman, "At Dawning" and "I Hear a Hush at Eve," and a musical setting of Tennyson's poem, "Now Sleeps the Crimson Petal." Miss Dayman read an impressive war story of a Belgian girl, "The Laughter of Lien."

This group of alumnae as well as being a section of the U.S.C. Woman's Club is also an affiliated club with the Women's University Club of the city.

Uses of February Snows.

Many philosophers have dispensed comfort to the suffering public of late, reminding them of some of the forgotten or overlooked blessings and joys of winter. These have even extracted some grains of consolation from the cold waves and the fuel famine. Such sublimated speculation baffles the ordinary mind, but there are a few facts in connection with February snows that are so obvious that even the dullest may understand them. One of them in this neck of the woods has to do with the winter wheat crop. The connection between the two is vital and intimate. For an illustration of this we have only to recur to our experience of a year ago. Then February was dry and cold and the ground was generally bare. Out of this came disaster to the winter wheat fields. Millions of acres sown in the fall and coming along through the early winter with fair promise of a bountiful yield fell under the blight of the February drouth and all but total failure of the crop resulted. For this, if for no other reason, the snow that has blanketed the wheat fields of Nebraska is welcome. It is a promise of the harvest, when it will be transmuted by nature's alchemy into grain for the world. Therefore you will hear but little complaint from the thoughtful Nebraskan about the snows that fall in February.—[Omaha Bee.

IN STORES AND HOMES.

NOVELTIES, IDEAS AND PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

By Olive Gray.

Up-to-datest.

The country club suit, consisting of a Baronette satin skirt, a silk blouse matching or toning with it, and a sleeveless jacket in contrast, the latter of satin, silk or velvet.

The turban in its pristine interpretation—swathed and entirely head concealing, like that of the unspeakable Turk's.

Fruits, more magical than ever before dreamed, for trimming upon spring millinery; and flowers such as may have bloomed in some Aladdinish garden of Never-Never Land.

The Bagasol, a description of which you will find elsewhere in these columns.

The day frock, gingham striped or gingham plaided, and developed in taffeta or in finest weave of crepe.

Now is the time to buy:

Metallic laces, at prices which make it imperative that they be purchased not alone for now, but for all future uses.

White French china. That long-wanted and for two years absent commodity has arrived at that big Broadway store, where china painters will delight to find the basis of their planned-for Christmas presents.

New spring hats, ready-to-wear, and at popular prices. Such hats are they as go well with one's first tailored suits, and such as will be available with many of the summer frocks. Skirts of Baronette satin —the most wanted of the garments for country club use—for about half the usual price.

Umbrellas That Bloom.

The umbrellas that bloom in the spring, tra la, are as colorful as the flowers brought forth by the long deferred rains.

Since umbrellas are about the only article of dress especially cultivated in rainy weather, why should they not be beautiful? There really ought to be a touch of loveliness about wet weather garb, since so many seem to try—quite successfully—to make themselves look as ugly as possible when it rains. Why not have our purple, maroon or green silk umbrellas decorated in watercolors?

The Bagasol.

Most ingenious is the new bagasol! Have you guessed it? It is first of all a capacious bag, of silk or satin, in stripes of varying or contrasting tints. It has two substantial rings for handles. No parasol is visible, but say the sun comes out, causing danger to your complexion, or while you are motoring the wind begins to blow, a finger pressure here, a deft twist there, and lo! a convenient and protective parasol is yours!

Not alone does this sol possess these virtues, but for packing in suit case or trunk, it is of utmost convenience. Short, compact, requiring the minimum of space—the new bagasol is sure to win approval from women of dress savoire faire.

Raining Violets.

It requires little weather wisdom to predict that on Monday it will not be raining rain, but raining violets: for, you see, it always rains them, on Inauguration Day. No, no! No politics in this event: but business. Local business and it will, unquestionably be busy-ness as well, since there are advantages—opportunities quite as rife as are the violets. Give you seven guesses as to which store on Broadway is the scene of this welcome rain-storm.

For Country Club Wear.

While all the colors are popular for country club attire, nothing is more striking than black and white.

Everyone who witnessed the fashion parade at the store on Lower Broadway, felt reassured of this, especially when observing the strikingly handsome effect of that suit consisting of a skirt in Baronette satin of black and white, a black velvet sleeveless coat and a hat combining the two colors, contrasted in crown and brim and related by flowers both black and white.

Clad in a Rainbow.

"If Cleopatra had worn clothes," I heard a woman say, as she viewed that wonderous figure posed before the Roman temple, in that store on Seventh street, where the windows are so enchanting—"If Cleopatra had worn clothes, she would have had a dress like that!" The dress was, I need not say, that scintillant one of rainbow tinted paillettes.

Ever New.

Fascinating in the variety, the novelty ever devised by Madame la Mode! Even when she employs materials well-known and often used before, she manages to think out some unexpectedness in their placing, some undreamed of way of treating them. Take, for example, the common field flowers which we have so long known—poppies, wheat-heads, bluets, daisies—but! These are appliqued upon the surface flatly, in embellishment of hat crowns, brims and brides! The effect is extremely different and interesting.

And So.

That minx, Dame Fashion, is for all the world like man! Let something become difficult of attainment and forthwith she wants it. Now that tin is precious—needed so for canning and preserving—what has the perverse creature done, but chosen it for making flowers in millinery!

On the Lenten Shelf.

These are the days when we not only Hooverize, but Lentenize as well, and the wise housew provision for both.

Upon the emergency she be a goodly supply of d salted fish—herring, finnan codfish, halibut. These not only appetizing in th but when added to vegetab they give a snap and sav the vegetables alone are lack.

For the first, or the pre- a luncheon or dinner, a thi wich of bread, buttered o with a thick mayonna sprinkled with finely minced is an excellent appetizer. Th dried fishes named are available, either for a first taste, or for the breakfast

Egg Economy.

An excellent way of in the use of eggs in makin lette is as follows: To fo use two tablespoonfuls of ground bread crumbs, add tw spoonfuls of milk and salt a per to taste. Allow the cr soak until soft. Beat the eg quite light, add the season then the bread crumbs, bea before placing in the omelet Cook in a well-buttered and turning the pan to cook th lette evenly, and place fo ment in a hot oven to brown garnish with finely-minced or serve with tomato or whit dusted with paprika. This more nourishing and more ing than a plain omelette.

ability, an experienced accompanist and a good linguist. Her command of the French language is unusual in an American, and several of her numbers will be sung in French.

The club will present a varied programme, closing with the patriotic cantata, "Paul Revere's Ride," Longfellow's immortal poem set to music by Dudley Buck.

The soloists in this work will be Earl Houck, the blind baritone; Harold Shugart, tenor; Lawrence Tibbet, baritone. Joseph Dupuy will direct and Will Garroway will be at the piano.

MacDowell Circles.

Mrs. Graham J. Putnam, probably the only pupil of Edward MacDowell in Los Angeles, has started two MacDowell circles, one in Hollywood and one in Los Angeles. They are not musical clubs, but represent all arts, as the late composer always stood for an affiliation of the arts.

The object of the circles is to give financial and artistic aid to the MacDowell memorial fund at Peterboro, and primarily just now, in war time, to give aid toward bringing wounded soldiers and sailors to the convalescent home at Peterboro. This home is the first of its kind started, and it was badly needed and should be supported by all patriotic Americans.

At present the altruistic motive of the MacDowell circles is patriotism. Valuable programmes by the best talent will be given from time to time.

Mrs. Putnam, whose address is No. 6059 Hollywood boulevard, wants to get 100 members, and those who join may rest assured that every cent contributed to the circle goes to the Soldiers' Home through Mrs. MacDowell.

Patriotic Programme.

The Matinee Musical Club will present a patriotic programme at its next regular meeting, in the tower room of Trinity Auditorium on Thursday, March 7, at 2:30 o'clock. Benjamin Scovil will talk on "Dodging shrapnel in France," Edward J. Cox will give an historic presentation of American patriotic music—giving tunes of the Revolutionary War, War of 1812, Mexican War and Civil War. Miss Josephine Niel will sing "Our Flag," by Mrs. C. J. Whitley, and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." Edith Lillian Clark is chairman of the programme.

GENIUS BURNS AGAIN.

John Emerson, and the child prodigy of the plains, Anita Loos, have just finished a story for Elsie Ferguson, entitled "Let's Get a Divorce." It is a satire on the ease with which divorce is obtained, and will be filmed in the south.

rehearsal, with Chaplin playing all the parts in turn—followed. If you need further proof that Charlie is an artist, you should see him directing one of his actors who is deaf and dumb. This actor is none other than the well-known landscape painter, Granville Redmond, who, though possessing immense dramatic talent, had to await the coming of the gifted Chaplin for his opportunity. So keen and clever a pantomimist is Charlie that he is able both to make himself understood and to understand Mr. Redmond, who is said to be doing remarkably clever work in this picture.

It was lunch time then. So we all went to lunch in Sid's beautiful house, Charlie and Edna Purviance still in their make-ups. After lunch it was discovered there was one of those awful—what Charlie calls "brick walls"—a dead stop, until a minor snarl in the story and its action was straightened out. For this, Charlie called Charles Lapworth into consultation. Then out came Charlie and kidded around a bit—he does that while he's waiting for an idea to pop, kept everybody laughing, while in the back of his head all the while was that awful question—the brick wall. Presently it came, the longed for idea.

He had just started once more for the stage, when Carlyle Robinson, his publicity man, came forward, announcing in a fairly awe-struck whisper: "The Earl of Dunmore!"

Of course, one cannot overlook a real Earl on the busiest day, so Mr. Chaplin paused and chatted a few moments. And though the Earl was an Earl, he realized that a comedian is a hard-working person, and so insisted Charlie should go back to work. Anyhow, Earl or no Earl, he was probably dying, just like everybody else, to see Charlie at work. So Charlie hopped onto the stage, and, having at last got possession of the longed-for idea, and having escaped all visitors, he set briskly to work. Half an hour, an hour, two hours passed, with no let-up to the filming of scenes. Somebody brought him some mail, which, after opening, he dropped as carelessly as the hero of a motion picture does when thickening the plot with "the papers."

"He'll be working like this until he finishes all the scenes he has in mind," said Brother Sid, "until 6, 7, or even 8 o'clock. And when the cutting begins, he will work all night and all day too."

You'd think, to see him acting out there on the stage, that he was still kidding. Maybe he doesn't quite know himself, you think.

him in the production of "Carmen of the Klondike," which is now being shown at the Strand Theater in New York, and which will shortly be shown here.

The daring Mr. Barker was furnished merely with a synopsis and continuity by Monte Katterjohn, author of the story, and then, going forth with his megaphone and the expression of one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, or a father of the Magna Charta, Mr. Barker went right ahead. The answer is that the picture has been a big success, financially as well as artistically. The Paralta sold it to the State Rights Distributors, Ind., for $90,000, the picture costing $40,000 to make.

Clara Williams is the star, and has scored a tremendous hit.

Perpetual Motion Item.

One of our best little cross-country commuters, Fannie Ward, has returned from New York, and will shortly begin work on a new story for Pathe.

Will Film Serial.

W. A. S. Douglas, president of the Diando Film Corporation, returned from New York last week, where he submitted a serial story to Pathe. It was accepted, and the title will be "The Wolf-Faced Man," the scenes being laid in the West during the period of 1860-70, and will contain fifteen episodes. George Larkin has been selected to play the leading part, and Stuart Paton, formerly of Universal, will direct.

Mr. Douglas also brought back with him from New York a renewal of the Baby Marie Osborne agreement, insuring her appearance under the Pathe banner for another year.

Hayakawa's Rosy Prospects.

That saki and rice will continue to be plentiful in the Hayakawa household during the coming year is now an assured fact.

Not only are the friends and admirers of Sessue Hayakawa unanimous in their delight over the Japanese actor's forming his own company in connection with the Haworth Pictures Corporation, but an even more reassuring compliment was received by the famous oriental actor last week in the form of divers telegrams from various exhibitors and release concerns, stating they would be delighted to book his productions. Of these the following, say the Haworth authorities, is merely a sample:

"Count upon us to book your pictures from the very beginning. We know a good thing when we see it and we know that the Hayakawa productions are going to be winners from the very first pop out of the box."

Clarke Irvine Writes.

From "somewhere in the Atlantic," comes a message from the former official pal of all the motion-picture actors of the western colony, Clarke Irvine, formerly editor of that famous weekly purveyor of film gossip, "The Screamer." Irvine is now a petty officer in the United States Navy, and if you address him Care U.S.S. Cheyenne, via New York, your letter will reach him. He professes himself as longing for the old home town, the actors, and especially the actresses, and as being a willing candidate for the receipt of letters, smokes and such.

Also, as a young apostle of pep, Irvine declares himself anxious to get into the fray. "As the days pass and developments are told from the other side, I have a rising and burning desire to hie myself across the sea and get into the fray. This idleness in a small ship during a real war, when so many slackers are around, makes one want to get up and brandish a sword," writes Irvine.

Triangle Starts New One.

"Mr. Briggs Closes the House" is the title of a new picture commenced last week at the Triangle. It is a two-reel comedy, written by Mrs. Kate Corbaley, author of the $1000 prize Triangle story, "Real Folks," which has scored such a decided success since its release.

The new subject is being directed by William Baudine, and deals with the comedies and errors of domestic life, when Mr. Briggs, who doesn't think much of the way his wife handles things, takes charge of the moving. Included in the cast are Edwin Brady, Myrtle Rishall, Anna Dodge, Fred Mack and Frank Caffrey.

Honest-to-Goodness Bull.

Roy Stewart, the cowboy star, and his crew of Triangle punchers, had a thrilling time the last day spent at the Triangle ranch studio, when the finishing scenes of Stewart's latest vehicle, "Boss of the Lazy Y," were taken. Considerable stock is run on the big 1800-acre ranch, cows, horses, steers, oxen and outlaw ponies, all of which are used in the Triangle western thrillers, and on this day two fine bulls decided to settle an old grudge at the "point of horns."

Quick to take advantage of the novelty of the fight, Director Cliff Smith's camera man had the crank turning and secured some most unusual "shots" before Stewart and his cowboys succeeded in roping the frenzied beasts and stopping what would have been a battle to the death.

Discrimination Item.

Darrell Foss, prominent member of the Triangle playing forces and especially popular with the ladies, appeared in person at one of the neighboring beach theaters when his picture "Her American Husband" was run. The next morning he was boasting about the full house drawn by his picture, when Bill Desmond spoke up and reminded his audience that it was also "country store night" at the theater, and suggested that perhaps the food given away had something to do with the size of the crowd.

However, Foss still maintains he can out-draw hams and bacon any day—especially the hams.

In the Realm of New Dramatic Film.

The picture stars and their pictures

That are to be seen on picture row in Los Angeles all the coming week and today.

Where, Oh Where?

Edith Storey, Metro star, when she arrived in Los Angeles, a few weeks ago, preparatory to filming scenes in "The Legion of Death," in which she will appear at Tally's Broadway this week, was met at the train by Western Representative B. A. Rolfe. Miss Storey requested Mr. Rolfe to get her dog from the baggage car.

"What kind of a dog is it?" asked Rolfe.

"A French poodle," answered Miss Storey, "white and shaggy."

Rolfe went on his mission and returned a few minutes later minus the dog. "I can't find any white dog in the baggage car," he protested.

This report precipitated a miniature riot, and the excitement was not quelled until Miss Storey and Rolfe arrived at the baggage car. Peeking in the open door the screen star was greeted by joyful yelps emitted by a French poodle tied near the door.

"That is my dog," said Miss Storey, turning to the bewildered Rolfe.

"But you said he was white!" exclaimed Rolfe.

"Well," said Miss Storey ruefully, "he was when he started."

Pocket Venus Works.

That pocket Venus, and Metro star, Viola Dana, is working at present in a film story of Kentucky, written by John Collins, her director, and entitled "The Night Riders." George Cheseboro is leading man for Miss Dana.

Lew Cody Engaged.

That famous professional lover of filmdom, Lew Cody, whose manly chest has during the past few months been the official resting place of such noted film stars as Mae Murray, Gladys Brockwell, Gail Kane and Mabel Normand, has been engaged as leading man for Edith Storey in her newest Metro starring vehicle, "Treasure." Mr. Cody takes the place of Wheeler Oakman in Miss Storey's company, Mr. Oakman having enlisted in the United States Army.

Another notable addition to Miss Storey's company is Lewis Willoughby, an English actor, who will make his debut on the screen as well as his first appearance in the United States, in support of the famous Metro star. Mr. Willoughby came direct to this country from Australia, where he had completed an engagement with J. C. Williamson. His last role there was the young clergyman in Edward Sheldon's "Romance."

"Treasure" is an original story by Leighton Osmun, of the Metro scenario staff. Frank Reicher is directing.

Made Noise Like Hero.

All away from the camera's eye and everything, Roy Stewart, Triangle cowboy star actor, was a hero, one day last week, when his quick decision and instant action saved a boy's life.

The little fellow, together with a number of friends, was enjoying target practice near the Triangle ranch studio where Stewart and his company was at work. In his excitement, the lad discharged his rifle, the bullet making a jagged wound from his knee down. The boy, who is subject to heart attacks, fainted. Stewart, who was filming an exciting riding scene near-by, saw the boy's dilemma, reined up his horse, and in a trice had the boy in his machine and speeding to the nearest hospital. Prompt attention saved the boy's foot, and possibly his life.

Rechristening Note.

Whether it excites you to know it or not, the fact remains that the Triangle Film Corporation has changed the name of its big ranch studio in the heart of the Santa Monica Mountains from Hartville to the Triangle Ranch Studios.

We are offended by plays that ignore the one great principle of man's federation, just as we are outraged to the point of war with a nation that proceeds wantonly and selfishly in defiance of that law. Every "crook" play starts with this principle clearly defined and often succeeds where better inherent material fails through ignorance of the first law.

Most of us find "Every Man" dreary, not so much because it is wholly impersonal as for the reason that it is not human. Everyday life becomes less of a sermon and more of an instruction in demonstratable principles, less of a school even and more of a workshop and laboratory.

"Experience" is as good a play as I think "Every Man" is a poor one for the reason that the morality names of its characters do not prevent them from being throbbingly human and their conduct is in nowise removed from the common weal and woe. "Experience" is morality socialized, and the smart modern audience devours it with sharp indulgence.

American publishers are now turning to verse and philosophy as never since the days of Whittier, Longfellow and Emerson. Publishers are business men, not idealists. They have their investments to look to and they try to bring out what the people want, knowing better than to give the people something and to tell them to like it. They can only account for the present popular taste on the ground that the war has turned the people to reading books that are rich in sentiment and reflection. May we not also expect that our reaction from the war willl have the same thoughtful and elevating effect upon the stage?

HIGH FINANCE FOR CHILDREN.

BY JENNIE VAN ALLEN.

"I never realized that my children were 'spenders' until conservation became the rule of the nation," confessed a man in moderate circumstances. "I supposed that spending was the special prerogative of rich men's sons until I began to urge systematic saving. My boys are under 10, but they scoff at the Liberty Bonds I offered to buy and sell them on the installment plan. They scorn the thrift stamps and sniff at my offer to start an account in the Federal bank. I've exhausted every scheme to arouse their interest and have offered them every conceivable inducement to save their coins. I've promised to match every dollar they earn. I've coaxed and threatened until I am heartsick, for I feel they have enlisted in that big army whose god is self-indulgence and self-gratification.

"Money scorches their fingers until it is spent for some fool thing. Generally it goes down their throats and the day is coming when their dollars will go up in smoke and there'll be a bottle between their nose and their chin.

"We're up against an awful problem, but the boys have the slate and pencil and are figuring it out to suit themselves. I often wonder how you manage on your small income, for you have a big family, and, as your neighbor, I know your bit of a house is brimful of fun and that there is no contention or discord.

SAVING AND SPENDING.

"Yes, we are a very happy family and I believe that it is due to a certain degree to the fact that our affairs are on a sound financial basis. I am a small salaried man and the spending of my income requires the finest financiering to make the dimes stretch round the board.

"But we steer clear of Parsimony, and I say Parsimony with a capital 'P,' for it is a sin that shrivels the soul and warps the mind. I think it is a crime to be stingy. Therefore, as a family we save with the most rigid economy, but spend with a liberal hand.

"I was earning $1 a day when I married a contented girl, who by temperament and training has become a contented woman. The spirit of contentment is an inherited characteristic of our children, just the same as the color of their hair and eyes.

"But in spite of our limited income we began saving pennies for our first baby and when he came we had $4.33 to start his bank account. This has been our invariable rule with every one of our ten children. Sometimes it was hard to lay away an occasional penny, but we never disregarded the custom and we never borrowed from the account, no matter how cruelly we needed a few dimes.

PAY THE CHILDREN.

"We have always paid our children for their services—the boys for doing the chores and the girls for household duties. But we are very exacting regarding the quality of their work and demand the most faithful performance of every task. Consequently, they will be conscientious in doing the work of the world and their employers will find them dependable, which is a big factor in getting and keeping a job.

"We fine them when they are cross or disobedient. They go to bed when the clock strikes. They never tease to sit up, for it costs a penny to put up a perfectly useless argument. We have plenty of plain, substantial food, but every Friday night we have a candy pull or a popcorn feast or roasted apples or some little frolic that makes a bigger appeal than an 'all-day sucker' or cheap candies.

"During the year we have many outings and the children pay their own expenses out of their own savings. I put up for the 'frills' and always manage a special treat for all the holidays. But the night before we go we figure out every cent of the cost. We each take our own purse and pay our own bills from care fare to 'fixings.' There is no wailing when passing a candy shop or an ice cream stand; no fussing to ride on merry-go-rounds. Not one of my children would indulge in a pleasure that was not shared by all the others and all are so splendidly independent that no one would 'sponge' on another.

NOT THE "OLD FOLKS."

"Above everything I want my children to be generous with each other and I want them to make the comfort of their parents their first consideration. I never expect to know the ignominy of being 'the old man' or their mother 'the old woman.' While they are children we play the principal part in the drama of their lives and until the curtain rings down we expect to have the center of the stage so far as decent consideration is concerned. We both aim to make our relations with our children harmonious and reciprocal. Many young people think that all they get out of their fathers and mothers is treasure trove and later they are certain to regard their parents a drag and a burden when they are old and helpless.

"There is always a baby at our house. The great superfacts of life are known even to the little ones and there is great rejoicing when a new life is expected. All through the long months of waiting the children are unspeakably tender of their mother. And all are so eager to save their pennies for the new baby's bank book. It's perfectly amazing how much they set aside from their earnings at home and abroad and how joyfully it is given.

"It's a big ceremony when mother carries the tiny babe to the bank and each youngster fills out his own deposit slip. We make a brave showing when the mother and I add our saving of pennies. I tell you, there is great rejoicing in our family circle when a new name is added to the savings department of the United State Postal Bank.

THE BANK BOOKS.

"When we get home we all read our bank books, for we all know how much we earn and how much we spend and how much we save. I find these dozen bank books very interesting reading. We all do sums in arithmetic to cast up the interest and figure up how much we are worth in dollars and cents.

"This scheme would make misers of children and give them an exaggerated valuation of money if they were not taught to give as well as to save. It is our invariable rule to tithe our earnings. This is a secret fund for the good of those outside our family and no one ever knows how it is spent, for we do not let our left hand know what we do with the right. And in all our spending we do as we please—there is no critic but our own conscience—no one presumes to make a comment. We are all free, and yet there is an invisible law in which we are all enmeshed.

"When it came to the Liberty Bonds the older children bought their own and loaned the little ones enough to make a start, for it is an especially fine investment for children. The thrift stamps catch their pennies and the children who are in school are sewing for the babies of France and Belgium.

"They are learning that financial independence preserves their self-respect as well as enabling them to have money for their own needs as well as for other people's emergencies. They are learning business principles and understand the fundamentals of banking. They have a vision of life and its grave responsibilities that will make them honorable, straightforward citizens of the greatest country in the world.

WHAT CONSULS SAY.

By a royal order published December 9, the Spanish government has appropriated $2,160,000 to be expended in assisting cultivators of oranges, lemons, and grapes for exportation, in the Provinces of Alicante, Almeria, Castellon, Murcia and Valencia.

Inspectors, dealers, manufacturers, and all others concerned are advised that the sale of anything in Canada by wine measure is illegal; that the offering for sale of any goods of which the contents are clearly marked in some unit of United States measure, e. g., "One Pint U.S.A. Standard," is illegal; that representing unmarked containers of goods as pints, quarts, etc., when their contents are actually United States measure (wine measure) is illegal. Goods in packages and containers may be put up and sold without any reference to the measure of the contents, or the contents may be indicated by weight in pounds or in ounces, but if any reference whatsoever is made to the contents by measure, it must be in Dominion measure only.

The collector of customs, Calcutta, has furnished to the consulate-general a list, complete to date, of all articles the importation of which into British India is prohibited. The following articles are included: Aluminum and manufactures of aluminum, books, cigars the product of a certain factory in Manila, cocaine and allied drugs, diamonds (unset,) gas mantles, gold coin and bullion, motor cars, chassis, motorcycles and parts thereof, and accessories of motor cars and motorcycles, other than tires, old newspapers in bulk, silver coin and bullion, except current silver coin of the government of India.

More than one-half of the mileage of Swiss railways is Federal owned. Since the outbreak of the war in 1914 there have been successive advances in railway rates, the Federal and corporate-owned lines acting in unison. These advances have been based on Federal legislation and have affected both passenger and freight rates.

There were 102,454 dozen straw hats, valued at $164,777, invoiced at the American consulate at Curacao, Dutch West Indies, for the United States during 1917, compared with 84,837 dozen, valued at $129,034, for 1916.

The government of Peru is making an affort at this time to procure legislation authorizing the construction of several railway extensions, in all some 200 miles, during 1918.

El Pueblo states that the agent of agricultural information and propaganda in Tacambaro, State of Michoacan, has advised the Mexican director-general of agriculture that there has recently been discovered in that section a plant known as "irguan," which produces red ink that is adaptable to various uses. The plant is said to be found in great abundance.

Salt making employs a large number of people in the Madras Presidency. It is a state monopoly and the salt is obtained chiefly by the evaporation of salt water. Some pans are worked by the government, but the majority are in the hands of lessees whose output is checked by government inspectors.

The exports of mahogany and cedar logs from the Bluefields, Nicaragua, consular district, to the United States increased from 3,051,467 feet, valued at $176,043 for 1916 to 5,869,786 feet, valued at $734,483 for 1917.

The manner of buying and paying for Mongolian produce is unique. Mongolia is still divided into tribes, and most of the tribal business is done by chiefs or princes. It is customary to make contracts in advance with the princes for any large quantity of goods, and the princes collect from their subjects the things that are desired. These contracts may be guaranteed by the central government at Urga, which consists of a ministry of five men, including the head Lama of Mongolia. It is said that no contract guaranteed by the central government has ever been broken, and very few of the contracts with princes without the guaranty.

In Central Holland, about Apeldoorn, are large tracts of practically waste land thickly covered with heather. From time immemorial this region was beautiful each August with the purple and gold of the flowering heather. But the end has come, temporarily at least. Because the customary fodder is lacking, heather is now, for the first time in Holland, being cut from those waste lands to be fed to cattle.

The South China silk trade during 1917 recorded the highest prices for raw silk reached in many years; yet, all things considered, the year was a very unsatisfactory one, and the closing months especially involved many firms, particularly American importers, in severe losses. The total yield of silk for the year is placed at the same quantity as last year—48,000 bales, as compared with 35,000 a year before and an average of 46,600 bales for the ten years previous.

A radio station is to be established at Boa Vista do Rio Branco, in the State of Amazonas, Brazil. Consul-General A. L. M. Gottschalk reports that the sum of $50,000 (United States currency) has been appropriated for this purpose. The station will be under the control of the Brazilian Ministry of Transportation and Public Works.

NEW BOOM IN OIL.

The Jumbo Peanut Becoming an Aristocrat in the Field of Commerce.

Terrapin, which used to be fed to laborers, long since received a patent of nobility among foods; "hawg an' hominy" may still sustain the cotton picker in the South, but in the North and East pork has also become an aristocrat of the dinner table. But as a climber, the peanut is out for a record. No longer is the peanut to be regarded lightly as something to be eaten, "fresh roasted" at a ball game or to be thrown down the yawning cavern opened by some elephant in a circus. The real "jumbo" peanut is at hand. It may not be an actual physical giant, but it is certainly going to be an industrial giant.

Sixty dollars an acre yielded by peanuts; $6000 to $7000 for a carload of peanuts, when a carload of the best Pennsylvania coal, under the direction of Dr. Garfield, is worth but $125 or so at the mine. These are figures worth studying. Contracts at $140 a ton for next crop nuts, are reported, and as much as $200 an acre yield is reported in exceptional cases in Georgia.

This is the new boom in oil, for the goober is in demand because it is full of fat. It is good, edible fat, too, and every pound of it which goes to American tables adds to the stock of fats which must be shared with the peoples abroad. Vegetable oils, like peanut oil, are wholesome and nourishing, and it is understood that the United States Army is utilizing southern edible oils in large quantities in its permanent kitchens.

But it is not only as a food that peanut oil has value. As a base for certain textile compounds, such as soluble oils used so largely in the mills of this city, peanut oil is highly regarded, and it is being used in steadily growing quantities. The meal, like other seed meals, has value too, and the peanut hay is an asset to the grower.

Petroleum has a long record of millionaires to its credit, or discredit, as the case may be. Peanut oil may make its millionaires, too, but in so doing it seems to be certain to spread a broad mantle over a large part of the South's farm land.—[Philadelphia Ledger.

HAPPY THOUGHT CLUB
SYMPOSIUM.

THE symposium of the Happy Thought Club yesterday, was graced by the presence of several fresh faces, including a couple of movie favorites, an inventor and a few sunny balladists. The Old Resident wore his new uniform as a Boy Scout and looked as pink and handsome as if he were lined up for that Lohengrin stuff. Among other things, Pearlie Pinkie had dropped in on him. As Pearlie weighs 270 pounds when dressed for the picnic this was some drop. Vaseline Botts tartly declared that this was a drop too much and intimated that it was not the first time that the old man had shown it. Presumably she had reference to the time when the pioneer celebrated the birth of Confucius by touching off a thousand dollars' worth of fireworks and blowing a hole in the brewery wall. At that time it took the combined efforts of seven policemen to round him up.

Therefore he could only grin when Vaseline whispered her opinion.

Another thing which soothed him was the tidings that came from Aggie Fish, the sweet singer of Michigan. It will be remembered that she had a very serious attack of thanatopsis and after a hasty consultation the surgeons adopted heroic measures and cut out her rebus. For some time afterward her mind was a dotty blank and her reason could be heard tottering on its throne for miles around. But now she is almost wise and the doctors think she will know pretty nearly as much as she ever did—if that is possible. It was also reported that she had withdrawn from the vampire staff of the club and would start a studio of her own, but the director said that he had signed up with both Aggie and Pearlie for the season and they would both appear in the next production of the studio. This will probably be a chapter in the drama of reincarnation and Pearlie will appear as the soul of a dodo. A soul weighing 270 pounds ought to make a hit with any audience.

Anyhow the Old Resident was pleased with the week's work. So also was Jot Woof, the amorous blacksmith of Anaheim, who tendered the visitor recognition in a limerick which caromed in this fanciful way:

A maiden of Muskegon, Mich.,
Was a mixture of mermaid and fish.
She would sit on the rocks
A-combing her locks—
Then plunge in the waves with a swish.

This reminded Bonnie Brierly of something, and taking a hairpin from her beauteous tresses she traced these pathetic lines on the plaster on the wall:

A matron quite staid lived in Ill.
When asked if she'd not smoke a pill,
Blushed and answered, "Oh, my!
I'm quite far from Chi.,
But if nobody's looking, I will!"

When John Godfrey Fortune, the Long Beach Telemachus, was called to the fore, he said that he was no orator, as Brutus was, but he could play quite cleverly on the pianola. With the assistance of a snide trombone he exhaled this fragment:

There was on old lady in Maine,
Had a daughter whose first name was Jane;
She eloped on a bike
With a fellow named Mike,
But she croaked when they met a fast train.

Nonpariel Nutt, who comes from Banning and has a most delicate set of wheels revolving in her shapely head, tuned up the mechanism and showered these lines on the company:

A lazy young rascal in Ore.,
Who was fishing adown by the shore,
Put all of his bait
On one line; said: "I'll wait—
If I do not catch less I'll catch more.

Flossie Frivol, who sings her story on a typewriter in a sweet bass voice, gave vent to this impassioned portion:

A queer little man from New York,
Went out to sea on a cork;
When the water came through
He exclaimed: "That won't do,"
And bailed it out with a fork.

Marjorie Evelyn Heartsease, the winsome secretary, would also winsome recognition as the melodious embalmer of our commonwealths. Taking her place in front of the radiator and stroking it with her magic fingers, it sounded forth this sweet message:

A bashful young damsel from Ark.,
With her swain took a stroll in the park.
She exclaimed: "It's no dream;
I surely will scream—
Don't! Kiss me again in the dark."

Lord Lummie, the blistered bard of Tapioca street, Pasadena, clattered up to the trough with a contribution which, when pasted on a washboard and brayed by a burro, sounded like this:

There was a young gemmun in Mo.
Whose pockets were plumb full of dough.
He raised Ned in St. Louee
Until he went flouis,
And his days are now turned to wough.

There was a gay monkey in Wash.
Who Said: "Hooverizing is bosh,
I'll eat what I please,
Be it leavings or fleas,
And won't ask permission, b'gosh!"

Otto DeWitt Moore, the wheezy woodpecker of the wildwood, came up to the scratch with an appropriate selection which he had carved with a safety razor on the bark of a live oak. When the tree was dug up and brought to the studio a fat man who had been studying how to play poker with his eyes shut interpreted the lines in this way:

There was a smooth skirt of N. Hamp.
Who was proud of her work as a vamp;
She used all her arts
In the breaking of hearts
And then went off with a tramp.

Pearlie Pinkie came scuttling down the pike all dressed up like a waffle, and, after beating in the door with her tamborine teasers, cast this glittering nugget on the table:

There was an old woman of Ore.
Whose hoofs were uncommonly sore;
She had a pet bunion
As big as an onion—
'Twas caused by the shoes that she wore.

Peep O'Day, the scintillating star of the Sunshine Sisterhood and the most finished performer on the umpty-ump that the world has ever known, embellished the scenery with a choice bouquet of posies which she had garnered in company with her twin sister, Aurora Dawn. The Pinkerton men exposed the treasure in this way:

OFF IN A BUNCH.

There once was a lady from Mo.,
Who wadded right out in the snow
The lucky old geezer!
It failed, quite, to freeze her,
At least if it did, it don't show.

But a guy who was registered Neb.,
Had feet of the kind they call "web."
He frost bit an ear—
The amorous dead—
On a day in the last part of Feb.

And oh the sad fate of a cur
Who came from a village in Ver.
He tried to kiss me
And I wish you could see!
For he lost nearly all of his fur.

Last night came a man from dry Ariz.,
I wish he had stayed where his hair is.
He has some he wears
But they aren't his own hairs
He says they are home where his lair is.

A spinster who dashed in from Del.,
Slipped up on the ice and she fell.
She wasn't quite dead
From the things that she said!
Although she alluded to (censored.)

Has anyone written of Ill. ?
In Chi. lived a terrible pill.
He went on a bat.
And drank a whole vat—
And now the poor fellow is nil.

A rancher whose tank too was hollow
Once stopped in a slake place in Colo.
He stayed there a day
Then they sent him away
He'd tried all their stock for to swallow.

I close with a verse on old Cal.
I'd like to go back, and I shall.
But the Ancient and Jot
Aren't as good as I've got!
And I'm a fastidious gal.

Lady Lou Mont Royal, the volatile and versatile Venus of the Verdugo Valley, was also equipped for the tourney. When she shredded herself these captivating lines were found tattooed upon the luscious ivory of her back:

A little old man down in Ark.
Saw the heavens were cloudy and dark.
So he roared once again:
"It's going to rain."—
It was Noah a-making his bark.

Spurred by the aspersions which were recently cast upon the patriotism of Ben A. Lone by members of the Happy Thought Club, Miss Colorado Topp, the champion chanter of Beaumont, was urged to desperate measures in his behalf. She heard the news of the spiriting away of Johosophat, the jumping bean recently presented by the Palm Springs denizen to the club zoo, and of the bearded stranger with considerable calmness. But the long-distance slam at innocent Ben moved her to frenzy. She ate a pound of ginger snaps and imbibed two quarts of ginger ale, and when she came to she found herself going some. She was riding Carrots, her cayuse, toward Banning, to consult with Miss Nonpareil Nutt, her erstwhile rival in the affections of Friend Lone. It was snowing hard, and the ground was white, which made Colorado and Carrots quite conspicuous on the landscape.

At Banning she found that Nonpareil was sojourning at Patton while her family enjoyed a brief rest, so she at once started homeward. Within a block of her domicile, Carrots snorted and stopped suddenly before a tall, bearded man. In just one second Colorado drew conclusions, rein and gun, while the fellow gave the high sign with all ten fingers. But before she could speak, the mysterious being whistled shrilly, and there came into view, leaping pathetically through the drifts, a small object which fell at the feet of the stranger. "Jehosophat;" exclaimed Colorado. The object quivered once and then fell exhausted, "No!" vehemently uttered the man. "That is yet a gesundheit, no?" "Stung again!" trilled the peppy poppy in stinging tones. With a groan and a leap, her captive gained freedom and disappeared in the snow, while the noble girl rescued the jumping bean, for such indeed it was, from the snow.

Now it is safe once more in the care of Prof. Watts Eaton Hughes, but Colorado says she does not care to claim the reward of 100 icy plunks, for her recent ride was nearly a freeze out, even if she was a pretty warm baby on a fiery steel. But the mystery is solved. The stranger undoubtedly sought the gesundheit at the zoo, and with consummate Teutonic cleverness failed to distinguish between that beast and the innocent Jehosophat.

The curator says the bean is utterly exhausted and resembles a mere string, but he is letting it sleep on a piece of cheese and expects it will be stronger soon. As for Ben—well, Colorado says everybody knows he is as innocent of guile as of clothes, and that is putting it fairly strong. He merely hermits because it is cheaper, and he can keep all his savings safely in a sand bank.

Gen. Goliath Gander, the erudite and affable compiler of the Gander Jingles was also numbered among those present at yesterday's symposium and noted with pleasure the efforts of a number of members to break into his collection of imperishable verse. He was very chummy with the secretary and persuaded Marjorie to round up the entries and arrange them for proper presentation. To show that she meant well this Heartsease person dashed off this item of war news:

Old Mother Hubbard went to the cupboard
To get poor Fido a wuerst,
When she got there the cupboard was bare
For Hoover had gotten there first.

Gen. Gander grinned and remarked that that was the first and worst entry in the contest—at least he judged so by reading the terminal lines. Whereupon, to show that she was no piker, Marjorie followed up with this:

Old King Cole was a merry old soul,
His fat sides shook with glee,
As he raked in the mon
With the aid of a gun,
And robbed both you and me.

Sunuv A. Gunn, the modern Virgil of Milkshake, N. D., who has a model of the Ferris wheel in his dome, asked permission to stable his Pegasus in the club quarters and wished to know the terms of entry. The secretary advised him that all that was necessary was to file his poetic license and exhibit a thrift stamp. As an entry for the Gander Jingles he presented a sneezing song, slam at Mary's lamb, which can best be interpreted on the exhaust of a tin Lizzie and is as follows:

Ka-a-a Choo!

Mary had a little cold.
It started in her head.
And every where that Mary went,
The cold was sure to spread.

It followed her to school one day,
Which was against the rule,
And made the children cough and sneeze
To have a cold in school.

The teacher tried to put it out
But oh! kachoo! ka-a chooo!
Instead of putting out the cold
The teacher caught it, too.

Addie Fermentina Basswood, the woman Wordsworth of Waterloo, although suffering from recalcitrant emotion crawled to the symposium on her hands and knees in order to embellish the occasion with an offering from her attractive wares. This seemed to be something like this when poured off to cool:

There was a man in our town
And he was wondrous wise,
When planting some potatoes
He cut out all their eyes.
And when he found their eyes were out
He sat down in the rain,
And thought if I should plant my eye
Would I come up again?

In connection with the alphabetical anthology there was a topping to introduce Maude Lynne, the amiable wooze, who said she wanted to cross the barrier with a fragment of open work gas meter. Maude is a kind-faced scout who does her thinking on the installment plan. She prefaced her appearance by the statement.

I am sending a few Xtempore lines a la Amy Lowell—perhaps not too Xact an imitation:

Xtry! Xtry!
X has come at last,
We whack the Xylophone to Xpress our Xtreme Xhilaration
That this anthology
Faces Xtinction—
Xcellent though its Xistence has been.
So farewell, the end is near,
Xit here.

Santa Monica Goldsword, the wily warbler of Whittier, again responded to the clarion call of her country and went over the top with a heavy charge of explosives in the "Y" class. When dug out of the scenery it looked something like this:

"Y" is for the yachts up and down the shore,
That's Y.
Y is for the yeoman, a friend in days of yore,
Y is for the Yankee going over yonder,
Y is for the younger youths who o'er the war sure ponder.
Y is for the yarn knit by the old and the young, too,
Y is for yes, we'll win, as we did years ago, and it's up to you
Y is for yell and yearn and yield, what the Kaiser must do.
Y is for the yoke he yet wears and he will soon be through.

In connection with the matrimonial bureau of the club there was a report from Zebulon Schoolcraft Skidaway, the happy Hottentot of Hawthorne, who made a remarkable contribution to the archives of Cupid. His presentment follows:

"An operation for confirmed bacheloritis, in the person of I. Havno Hart, was performed yesterday by Mrs. Ximenia Ray, who was ably assisted by Rev. Doctor Joinhem. Mrs. Ray had but recently returned with high honors from post-graduate studies at the Reno Institute for Matrimonial Vivisection. Mr. Hart went under ether at high noon yesterday. Dr. Joinhem administered the anesthetic with his usual happy dispatch. Mrs. X. (ex-Ray) Hart reports the patient resting easily today, and says she has every reason to believe the operation successful. She is particularly pleased because it is her first case since taking her last decree from the institute.

Let the wedding bells ring,
For another old thing
Is tranfixed by Cupid's sharp dart;
We thought he was crusty,
And musty,
And fusty,
But the X. Ray soon found a heart.

Gasolina Nickelby, the short story performer who sometimes frivols and sometimes sobs, held up her hand for recognition and said she had words without song which she would whistle with due apologies to all concerned. It sounded strangely like this:

Comrades.

The little mile you've walked with me,
Along life's weary way,
Has been so filled with friendship rare
And beauty, day by day.
That I would pray the gods above
My wish might granted be—
Sometime in this or other lives
You'll walk again with me.

By this time David Oliver Tobasco, the studio director, announced that all hands would have to line up for work as a lot of choice sunshine was being wasted while the actors were writing valentines to themselves.

So the symposium adjourned.

In the meantime all applications for membership, all entries in the State limerick contest or for the Gander Jingles, as well as marriage and obituary verse and contributions in the closing classes of the alphabetical anthology may be addressed to Eugene Brown, editorial rooms, The Times.

Emma Carus, boxer.

Delightful in comedy and quick with her fists, she has handled the gloves with the world's greatest, from John L. to Packy McF. She "comedies" (but does not box) at the Orpheum this week.

EMMA CARUS IS A BOXING FAN.

If there's anything Emma Carus loves to talk about it is boxing. A thirty-third degree fan, the unparaleled comedienne coming Monday to the Orpheum, knows the fistic sport from A to Z and Z to A. She is a living, breathing boxing encyclopedia and is familiar with the record of every boxer of note since the days of Jem Mace.

All the blows famous in the squared circle's history are known to her, such as Fitzsimmons' solar plexus, McCoy's cork-screw, etc., and she takes delight in demonstrating them on the unsuspecting. She has some wallop, too, make no mistake, and she could give pointers in the manly art of most of them.

Miss Carus's knowledge of the game is so complete and thorough that she is thinking seriously of writing a book on it for women. There was a time when Miss Carus was a heavyweight, physically speaking. But now she is a featherweight in heft, not the Benny Leonard kind, but a featherweight just the same. And all through boxing.

"I box three rounds every morning," said Miss Carus. "And this best of all exercises helps me to keep down in weight, and puts me in physical trim."

Miss Carus's first introduction to boxing occurred when she was a youngster and toured the country with John L. Sullivan's troupe. Since that time she has appeared in different acts where some of the champion boxers were supposed to do a little real acting.

For her own amusement, Miss Carus has at different times put on the gloves with Willie Ritchie, Battling Nelson, Ad Wolgast, Packy McFarland and others.

"While I enjoy athletics of all kinds, especially baseball, the greatest of all outdoor sports," said Miss Carus, "there is nothing that pleases me more than a good boxing match. I have witnessed many of them. To my mind there is no reason why women should not attend boxing contests. There may be times when the sport appears rough, but on the whole I have never seen anything in that respect that would shock a person any more than rough scenes I have witnessed at football games and automobile meets. For real excitement give me a good boxing match!"

FINLAND AND ITS EARLIER HISTORY.

IN AREA ABOUT THE SIZE OF MONTANA—FINNS IN POSSESSION A THOUSAND YEARS.

If the former Russian Empire finally goes to pieces, one of the first fragments that may be expected to fly off from the main body is the Grand Duchy of Finland, which has already declared its independence. Finland is, with one or two exceptions, the most non-Russian part of Russia. Geologically it belongs to the Scandinavian possessions, being cut off from Russia proper by a chain of lakes which form one huge trench from the Baltic to the White Sea. It has an area of 144,255 square miles, and is therefore about the size of Montana, or two-thirds the size of France.

OWE CIVILIZATION TO SWEDEN.

The Finns, who form nine-tenths of the population of the duchy, took possession when they were still barbarous nomads, a thousand years or more ago. Racially, they are aliens in Europe, being akin to the yellow peoples of Asia, the Mongols and the Turks; although the relationship is now remote, and the travelers will find few evidences of it. It the twelfth century they were Christianized from Sweden, and at the same time they were brought under Swedish political control; for, like many good people before and since, the Swedes went forth with Bible in one hand and sword in the other.

None the less, the Swedes extended to the backward Finn superior civilization, gave laws, improved their crude culture, and introduced them various practical arts. sixteenth century the country raised to the dignity of a duchy, and at the opening seventeenth Gustavus Ado gave it a diet, composed of the orders of the nobility, burghers and peasants.

LAWLESS AMBITION DOOMED, DECLARES CARDINAL GIBBONS.

Present World-wide War Striking Illustration that Schemes Conceived in Passion Cannot Succeed.

BY JAMES CARDINAL GIBBONS.

THE transfiguration of Christ is a beautiful type of the Christian church. Born in weakness and obscurity, like her divine Founder, she suddenly emerges from the dark recesses like the sun bursting from a cloud, and in a brief time she shines forth on every hilltop of the Gentile world, illuminating the nations of the earth by the splendor of the gospel as our Lord [illegible] his rays on Mt. Tabor.

Let us transport ourselves in spirit to the dawn of the Christian era and let us stand in imagination on one of pagan Rome's seven hills. We see at our feet that immense city teeming with a population, according to the estimate of Gibbon, of 3,000,000 inhabitants. We behold that metropolis dotted here and there with idolatrous temples and niches to false gods erected in the corners of the streets. And as an evidence that the highest intellectual attainments do not protect a man from the most degrading superstition and grossest vices those people were given up to every species of idolatry. They worship the sun and moon and stars of heaven. The seas and rivers, the mountains and groves have their tutelary divinities. They worship every striking object in nature. They worship every being except God only, to whom alone divine homage is due.

Rome was the focus of the idolatry practiced throughout the empire. Every divinity that was adored in the vast dominions of Rome had his temple and his shrine in the imperial city.

What I say of Rome I might affirm of the Roman empire, and what I affirm of the Roman empire I could assert of the civilized world; for Rome was mistress of the world

"INSIGNIFICANT" MEN.

Such was the condition of society when our Lord appears on the theater of public life. He calls around Him twelve insignificant men—men without wealth and destitute of human learning, men without the prestige of fame, without political or social or family influence. He commands them to effect the most mighty moral revolution that has ever occurred in the history of the world. He commands them to uproot idolatry from the face of the earth and to establish in its stead the worship of the one, true and living God. He commands them to eradicate the most darling and inveterate passions from the hearts of men and to plant in their stead the peaceful reign of Jesus Christ.

The apostles had implicit faith in their divine Master when He commanded them to preach the gospel to every nation. They knew He was God. They knew that His word was truth, that His word was power and omnipotence. They had been witnesses of His miracles. They knew that He who said in the beginning: "Let there be light, and there was light;" "Let the earth bring forth fruit, and it came forth;" they knew that He would now through their instrumentality cause the light of faith to shine on the darkened intellects of men and the fruits of sanctification to grow abundantly in their hearts.

Bachrach

James Cardinal Gibbons,

Archbishop of Baltimore, who discusses here the marvelous diffusion of the primitive Christian religion.

They parcel out the Roman empire among themselves. Their only weapon is the cross, their only credential the gospel of Christ. St. Peter commences his apostolic ministry in Jerusalem, where his first sermon is followed by the conversion of 3000 souls, some of whom had, no doubt, witnessed the crucifixion of our Savior, and perhaps even had a hand in His death. He afterwards establishes his see in Antioch, and finally suffers martyrdom in Rome.

RESULTS OF THE WORK.

And if we are amazed at what I might call the pious audacity of the Apostles and their immediate successors in undertaking the Herculean task of converting the nations, we are still more astonished when we contemplate the result of their labors. St. Paul, about thirty years after our Lord's crucifixion, writes these words to the Romans: I give thanks to my God through Jesus Christ, because your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world, and, of course, spoken of by men who were in sympathy and communion with the faith of Rome. The religion of Christ had not only spread among the people of Rome, but neophytes were found even in the palace of Nero.

What a contrast presents itself to our minds between the peaceful conquests of the Apostles and their successors on the one hand and the bloody victories achieved by the great generals of antiquity on the other, whether we consider the weapons with which they fought, the battles which they won or the duration of their victories.

Alexander the Great, who may be considered one of the greatest generals of ancient times, subdued nations by wading through the blood of his fellow-beings. By the sword he conquered and by the sword he kept his subjects in bondage. But scarcely was he consigned to the grave when his empire was dismembered and his subjects shook off the yoke that had been imposed upon them.

The Apostles conquered kingdoms to their Divine Master, not by force, but by persuasion, not by the material sword, but by "the sword of the spirit which is the word of God;" not by shedding the blood of others, but the voluntary shedding of their own blood; not by enslaving the bodies of men, but by rescuing their souls from the slavery of sin. And the spiritual republic which they founded exists unto this day, is constantly extending its lines, and is consolidated, not by frowning fortifications and standing armies, but by the divine influence of religious and moral sanctions.

LAWLESS AMBITION.

What does this prove? It proves that the pen and the voice are mightier than the sword. It proves that "peace hath her victories no less renowned than war," aye, victories more substantial and more enduring.

It proves that all schemes conceived in passion and fomented by lawless ambition of which the present world-wide war is a striking illustration, are doomed, like the mountain torrent, to carry terror before them, and to leave ruin and desolation after them; while the mission of men laboring in the name and under the inspiration of heaven, is destined, like the gentle dew of heaven, to shed silent blessings around them and to bring forth abundant fruit in due season.

No rational or dispassionate mind can review the history of the infant church without discerning the stamp of divinity impressed upon her brow. When we consider the rapid growth of the Christian religion and the feeble instruments that were employed to produce such results, when we consider the hostility the Apostles encountered in the whole course of their ministry, when we contemplate the opposition they met with from the learned and from the populace, for every author of note whose writings have come down to us, such as Tacitus, Suetonius and Pliny, all of whom speak with contempt and derision of the Christian religion; when we consider the hostility of the priests of the pagan superstition and from the established government itself, for the Roman emperors during nigh 400 years were the high priests of the existing heathen worship; they were as closely identified with the pagan worship as the Czar of Russia was allied with the Greek church of today; above all, when we reflect on the sublime and austere moral code which they proclaimed to a people whose religion tolerated and even sanctioned the most dissolute morals, we are forced to admit that Christianity is divine and miraculous in its origin.

STRONG CONFOUNDED.

Well did St. Paul sound this keynote when he exclaimed: "The foolish things of the world hath God chosen that He might confound the wise, and the weak things of the world hath God chosen that He might confound the strong, and the things that are contemptible and the things that are not that He might bring to naught the things that are that no flesh should glory in His sight."

And, indeed, the wisdom of God is specially manifested in the adoption of means utterly disproportioned to the end to be attained, so that the world might be convinced that Christianity is the work, not of man, but of God, and that all the glory should redound to Him.

For if Christ had appeared in all the pomp and splendor of a temporal sovereign; if He had associated with Him the power of Caesar; if He had impressed into His service the armies of imperial Rome, the world would justly exclaim: There is no miracle here, for Christianity was propagated not by the finger of God, but by the arms of the flesh." Or if our Lord had employed in the service of His religion the poets and orators, the historians and literary men of His age; if He had inspired a Virgil and an Ovid, a Cicero and a Tacitus, to wield their pen and raise their voice in attestation of the new religion, then the world would cry out: There is no miracle here, for the Christian religion was propagated not by the folly of the cross, but by the persuasive words of human wisdom.

GROWTH EXPLAINED.

The historian Gibbon, the author of "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," was obliged to admit the wonderful growth of the Christian religion in the first three centuries. But he endeavored to explain the phenomenon on purely natural grounds. He ascribes the spread of Christianity to these five great causes: First, the indomitable zeal of the primitive Christians; second, their pure and blameless lives; third, their unshaken belief in the immortality of the soul; fourth, their alleged power of working miracles, and, fifth, their admirable organization.

There is no doubt, indeed, that these causes exerted a powerful influence on the propagation of Christianity. But I maintain that they were secondary and not primary causes. They were the effects of a first great cause. If you behold a beautiful, placid lake, in your travels through Switzerland or the Adirondack Mountains, your curiosity may lead you to discover the streams which feed it. Your investigation is rewarded by finding five rivulets flowing into it, in pursuing your investigation still farther you find that these streams have their source in the snow-capped mountain in the distance. Let us apply this illustration to the subject before us.

Who inspired the primitive Christians with their unquenchable zeal and enthusiasm—an enthusiasm in an unpopular and hated cause? Who raised them to the high plane of moral rectitude; who impressed them with that unclouded faith in the immortality of the soul, and in a future destiny? Who imparted to them the power of working miracles; who gave them that indissoluble organization cemented, not by force but formed by the golden bonds of love?

PRAYER FOR SOLDIERS.

Who was it but the Lord of hosts? It was He who said: "Go teach all nations, and behold I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world." "Fear not, I have conquered the world." It was He who said: "The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong." It was He who said: "Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you, that ye may go and bring forth fruit, and your fruit should remain."

My brethren, imitate your forefathers in the faith by your unclouded belief in an immortal destiny. Imitate them by the rectitude of your lives and by your zeal for the honor of God and His church. Imitate them, above all, by working miracles of grace and mercy, by your charity and compassion for the sufferings of your fellow-beings.

Let us earnestly pray that our brave young soldiers who are now in the trenches, or who are preparing to go there, may be preserved in their faith and morals from the dangers which surround them, that they may heroically fulfill their glorious mission, and that they may soon return triumphant to the bosom of their families and to their beloved Columbia, the mighty mother of us all.

The Boy and the Buck Saw.

Herewith is presented a plea for double-barreled conservation that should arouse every father to think.

Has your household felt the fuel shortage? Most households have.

If your young son wasting a lot of animal spirits with the corner gang, just bubbling over with energy plus, that gets him into all sorts of scrapes, or is he one of the namby pamby, thin-chested, mollycoddled brand that's going to take a heap of seasoning before he amounts to a tinker's darn?

Either way have you considered the possibilities of the boy and the buck saw?

Wood as a fuel conserver is plentiful, but it costs high for labor to do the sawing and sawed cordwood does not underprice coal very much.

How about putting a sawbuck out there in the back yard and gearing the young man of the household to the action end of a buck saw?

To be sure, the youthful scion of the family will feel that he is being imposed upon. If he resents the task maybe you will discover some things about his unformed character it might be well for you to know. If he tackles the job whistling he's got the stuff in him and you've been rather neglectful in not bringing it out before this time.

You'll be putting health, muscle and character into your boy with every swing of the buck saw. You'll be putting economical fuel into your home and helping America at war.

Make the young man see it that way. Life is getting too soft for the growing boy of an average family, anyhow. Give him a chance.—[St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Albany Republicans' Quandary.

At Albany the Republican leaders have decided to nominate a woman next fall for one of the seven elective State offices. Having gone that far, they are faced with these problems:

Shall she be married or single?

If single, shall she be young or old, comely or plain?

If married, shall she have children or not?

Or would it be better to have a widow?

Some of the bosses, particularly those who believe a married woman's place is in the home, are inclined to favor an unmarried woman. As to qualifications, they place oratory first and good looks second.

The widow hasn't figured much in the calculations of the bosses so far, because, as one of them expressed it, "a widow is always dangerous."

Thus far the best judgment of the Republican bosses is that the place on the State ticket that a woman is best qualified to fill is the office of the State Treasurer.—[Boston Globe.

THEIR :: MATINEE :: IDOL.

The Young Adonis Is J. Warren Kerrigan.

This picture is from the Paralta,

Not the Parthenon, but it has just been discovered and is undoubtedly a smiling likeness, if not a speaking one.

Enraged.

WHY RODRIQUEZ THREW BRICKS AT PARALTA.

TOO much realism in the construction of a set for J. Warren Kerrigan's Paralta picture, "The Turn of a Card," which Clune's Broadway Theater will show for a week, beginning this afternoon, resulted in the Paralta studios being bombarded by an irate Mexican. Bricks, broken windows, several badly scared women and a sadder but wiser hombre were the principal "props" and participants. Manuel Rodriquez, though not on the Paralta list of stars, had the stellar part.

Rodriquez, his wife and a goodly number of offspring tenant a small piece of property a few hundred yards east of the Paralta studio. Most men work when they can find employment. Rodriquez, like so many others of his countrymen, worked when he felt like it. But he owned the small piece of property where he had a nondescript sort of a house that he called "homex." Recently offers were made for the sale of the property. The Mexican had agreed to dispose of his land at a fair valuation. But he wanted one more day to think it over. Finally he announced to his wife that he would accept the offer, and he started downtown, but unhappily he looked toward the extra lot of the Paralta studios and there saw an object that caused him to forget all about the sale of his land. Rodriquez was seeing millions, and they looked red to him.

The object that attracted his interest was a tall oil derrick. It had been erected in connection with Mr. Kerrigan's picture, "The Turn of a Card," and was to represent the gusher that Kerrigan as the hero, Jimmy Farrell, strikes in the Oklahoma oil fields. Now, oil derricks are no new thing in and about Los Angeles. Scores and scores of people have grown suddenly rich here by striking oil in their backyards. Witness the Wilshire district and Lake Shore drive! Rodriquez began to see himself among the new rich. Five hundred dollars for his land and oil right on the next lot! It was too much for the Mexican, and straightway he rushed downtown to demand tens of thousands where hundreds had sufficed before. For two days Rodriquez kept open house to his friends, but suddenly came a rude awakening. He saw Mr. Kerrigan and company out about the supposed gusher; he saw camera men busily "shooting" scenes of reel oil wells instead of real gushers, and gradually there dawned upon Rodriquez that his dream of sudden riches had ended. Then the Latin temperament asserted itself.

Grabbing up bricks as fast as he could, the Mexican visited his rage on the Paralta plant. Fortunately, the main studio property is surrounded by a high board fence which kept the infuriated man out. But it did not keep the bricks away. After firing a half-dozen over the fence, Rodriquez attacked the main office building. He sent several bricks crashing through the windows; caused women clerks to stampede and led to a suspension of operations all over the lot. Some of the more timid readers in the scenario department thought the bricks were surely thrown by an irate author whose masterpiece had been rejected. But Robert Brunton, the director of Paralta productions, had had an extensive acquaintance with authors, and knew better.

Several of the Paralta forces rushed out of the front gate and seized Rodriquez, still fighting mad from much red liquor and financial disappointment. They turned him over to the property men to hold until the arrival of the police, but Mr. Brunton, through an interpreter, learned the cause of the bombardment. So, instead of calling for the police, Mr. Brunton hired Rodriquez as the rebel leader in his next South American picture. But Rodriques still grits his Spanish teeth and fiercely cries "Carampa," whenever any one mentions the incident in his presence.

Consolation Item.

Robert Brunton of the Paralta studios hired an assistant director who went to work on Saturday. Now it seems that the company pays salaries on Saturday up to the preceding Wednesday. The assistant found his pay envelope one day shy. "How about this, Mr. Brunton?" he asked. "I'm shy a day's pay. I started on Saturday."

"Never mind about that now," said the manager of productions, "When I fire you, I'll fire you on Friday and you'll get a full week's pay."

It is Finished.

THE MAKING OF A GREAT WAR PLAY.

BY ANTONY ANDERSON.

THIS most modern of wars is to be most modernly chronicled.

Always the stories of the war have been told. The deeds of valor and sacrifice have ever found favor in the public ear. First it was the poets and the old court singers whose minstrelsy told of the triumphs of their heroes. Then came the business-like memoirs of Caesar and Sallust. Following them was the learned and heavy day of the historians, with ponderous descriptions and lengthy analyses. Novelists next seized the deeds of battle for material in thrilling romances, as written by Sir Walter Scott and the great Hugo. And then came the day of the war correspondent, who braved the battle's fury to write the vivid word.

But the greatest of all wars is here now, and it is to be recorded in history as no other war has been recorded. The minstrel's song is too feeble, the historian's effort too dull; no man is so great he can encompass it in his memoirs; the novelist's pencil falters in the cyclonic drama; the war correspondent is banished. It is to the moving picture the War Offices of all nations have turned for the faithful and competent report of the greatest tragedy of all time.

Always the greatest genius of the time has responded to the cry for some one capable and worthy to record the wars imperishably. The Greeks had their Homer; the Romans their Caesar, the British their Scott, the French their Hugo; and now the Allied nations have called to their aid the supreme dramatic genius of the day, David Wark Griffith.

The dramatist succeeds the writer, the camera succeeds the pen. When the British War Office declared its decision to select David Wark Griffith as the one civilian amid the tens of millions to whom all the secrets of the front should be unfolded, to whom alone the colossal massing of dramatic material should be revealed, all the world waited for the result of this most daring experiment. A prominent member of the British nobility said in an interview:

"It is a magnificent compliment to America that one of its sons should be selected for so great a task. But this is a day when capacity and ability alone count. History is merely a recreation for thoughtful minds; precedents are but the litter of the past. The greatest genius of his day was needed, and Mr. Griffith was selected. It is well that we have recognized him."

For months, Mr. Griffith labored. He entered the front-line trenches, he underwent bombardment; he saw humanity without the mask in all the frank exposures that fear and desperation and vaulting courage bring; he saw the wounded, the dying and the dead; he heard the calls of the bleeding, the prayers of the dying, and the rattle in the throats of those so soon to be numbered with the slain.

He rode in the battle planes miles above No Man's Land, he heard the gossiping wireless that told of midnight raids; and he attended the gigantic labors of the great guns. Through destroyed villages he passed; stood amid the debris of wrecked homes; saw countless thousands marching desolately along highways to safety. All the wretchedness, the woes, the sorrows, the tragedies of a civilian populace in the war zone, he viewed—and more, he lived amid it.

Then he conceived his story, he photographed it, consuming more than fifty miles of film in the taking, and at last it is complete.

Never has a more wonderful love story been told. Never has a more absorbing drama been unfolded. All the mature capacity of Mr. Griffith's genius has been expended in proving the motion picture is the perfect medium for recording the war, and the result is his third great film drama, "Hearts of the World," which will be shown for the first time at Clune's Auditorium, Tuesday evening, March 12.

Baldheads Exempt.

The obvious target that a bald head offers to Teuton sharpshooters was assigned by an army officer here as a vital reason why men minus hair on their heads should be exempted from military service unless they can be used in some branch that does not call for exposure to the enemy.

Capt. C. E. Jenkins, in charge of an ambulance company at Camp Funston, gave this advice when speaking to members of the local exemption boards:

"Bald-headed men are not altogether welcome," Capt. Jenkins said. "They present a shining target for the enemy, and besides, they cannot withstand cold. They would make admirable decoys, but thus far we have not felt the need of using hairless heads for that purpose."—[New York World.

Her Grandma Used Sage Tea To Darken Her Hair.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with a wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, at very little cost. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied — it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and beautiful. This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Notice to Sick Women

The Experience of These Women Prove That There is a Remedy for Your Illness.

Aberdeen, Idaho.—"Last year I suffered from a weakness with pains in my side and back. A friend asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I did so. After taking one bottle I felt very much better. I have now taken three bottles and feel like a different woman. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the best medicine I have ever taken and I can recommend it to all suffering women."—Mrs. Percy Prestidge, Aberdeen, Idaho.

Kingfisher, Okla.—"For two years I suffered with a severe female trouble, was nervous, and had backache and a pain in my side most of the time. I had dizzy spells and was often so faint I could not walk across the floor. The doctor said I would have to have an operation. A friend asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After taking ten bottles I am now well and strong, have no pain, backache or dizzy spells. Every one tells me how well I look and I tell them Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did it."—Miss Nina Southwick, R. F. D. No. 4, Box 33, Kingfisher, Okla.

COMFORTS AND LUXURIES FOR THE INVALID

A New Collar?

NEW NECKWEAR IS ALTOGETHER SO CHARMING THAT A WHOLE PAGE IS GOING TO BE DEVOTED TO IT NEXT WEEK. THERE WILL BE ALL SORTS OF COLLARS FOR YOU TO COPY AND SOME EASILY-TRANSFERRED DESIGNS TO WORK UP IN SILK AND COTTON. THIS IS A VERY VALUABLE PAGE. DON'T THINK OF MISSING IT!

MAYBE you will say that there couldn't be such a thing as a luxury for an invalid, that luxury implies something one does not absolutely need and that anything which caters to the comfort of the invalid is a necessity. And maybe you are right. But we won't argue the question. We'll talk about the lovely suggestions which are laid out on this page today for the kindly friends of invalids who want to make something which will help to shorten the long hours of illness.

There are heaps of things that any one with clever fingers can make to gladden the hearts of the sick-a-bed ladies of their acquaintance, but, of course, only a few can be shown on the page. First of all there is the design for the tray set, including cover, napkin (which can also be repeated for a toast or roll cover), napkin ring, and cover for the tumbler. This is such a simple set that it could be worked almost in an afternoon. The corner is repeated four times for the tray cover, but only once for the napkin. A bright color scheme which will be cheerful for the invalid's tray can be worked out by making the flowers blue with lazy daisy stitches, the leaves green with the same stitch, stems brown and the little fuzzy flowers yellow with single stitch and orange centers. The edges of all the pieces of the set are worked over with the cross-stitch or double overcasting. Turn a very small hem on the wrong side and baste it or machine stitch it in place, then overcast it in one direction with stitches all slanting evenly, and come back with another row of stitches crossing these. Blue or black makes a good color for this finish. You might even use two colors, blue and black or blue and brown.

The napkin ring is finished with a snap-fastener. The tumbler cover can be made double and a piece of cardboard inserted to make it stiff. A brass ring crocheted over with blue cotton should be attached in the center to lift the lid with, or the ring could be a small ivory one.

Then there is the hot-water bottle cover of turkish toweling. This is lined with canton flannel, bound with cotton tape braid and embroidered with the words in an outlining of large French knots. A snap fastener holds the flap securely. The beauty of this cover is that it can be washed and sterilized thoroly, a fact to be kept in mind when making anything for an invalid.

Pine pillows are the loveliest things to give an invalid. The odor of the needles brings back memories of happy days in the woods; they are also soothing and soporific and when heated a pine pillow will be found very useful in dispelling neuralgia or earache. Here is one covered with a gay washable silk. You might gather the needles yourself this summer and fill several for your invalid friends. Small pillows uncovered can be bought in the shops for as low as sixty cents.

Every invalid is sure to have a few borrowed books lying around, and as medicines will spill and other accidents happen it is a happy thought to give a sick person a cover for the borrowed book. A simple cover of stitched suede leather with a small ivory paper cutter thrust in a strap at one side and a marker of grosgrain ribbon could be made at home. Better yet is the cover of patent leather or oilcloth stenciled in bright design, as this can be wiped off with a damp cloth and kept fresh and clean.

When the invalid receives friends she wants to look as pretty and attractive as possible. For her then is the bed jacket and pretty cap. There are any number of pretty short jackets to go over the nightgown, but the one shown is as simple a design as one could make. It is of pale pink albatross with inserts and edging of Val lace, and ribbons to tie in front and under the arms. The cap is unique in cut and bound to be becoming. That point is wired to keep it in shape, but the back is so flat that one could lie back on it without any discomfort. It is mostly silk lace and ribbon.

Bed socks are always an acceptable gift for older people whose circulation is poor. Indeed, until the warm weather comes a knitted pair of socks to pull on when the feet get cold from inactivity will please any one who has to lie or sit all day.

There can never be too many pillows around an invalid. When one is sick and sits up for any length of time there are many tired places that a small pillow like the one pictured will fill and ease. This is a washable cover, tho it is embroidered in color.

Besides the comforts already discussed you may find the following list suggestive of gifts for your invalid friends:

A metal scrap basket, enameled and decorated.

Wall pockets of cretonne to hang on the head or foot of the bed and hold the small belongings.

A pretty workbag.

Combination bedside table and bookcase made from two wooden boxes.

Screen for the lamp.

An electric torch.

A small clock.

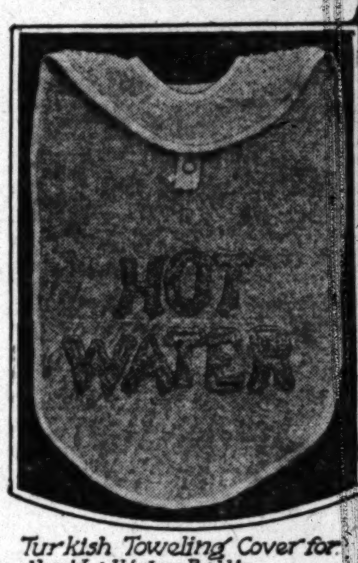
Puzzles.

Scrapbook.

Good pair of scissors for clipping.

Bottle of toilet water—not too strong a perfume.

Flower vase.



Turkish Toweling Cover for the Hot Water Bottle.

Save Your Scraps of Wall Paper

NEVER let your paperhanger get away without leaving you some scraps of the paper he uses on your walls. It not only comes in handy for patching later on when rain or heat makes a patch necessary, but from attractive wallpaper the prettiest accessories for a room can be made. Of course figured papers are the most valuable in this respect. If you can coax an old sample book from the interior decorator you will find it quite an asset in this work.

First of all there is the framed tray for which a piece of very good-looking wallpaper can be used as a foundation. The best way to make a tray of this sort is to buy a mahogany or enameled picture frame and cut a piece of wallpaper to fit so that the design falls symetrically in the middle. Brass handles are then screwed into the ends.

A scrap basket of wallpaper can be made by pasting the paper over heavy cardboard cut into the required pieces, four sides and a bottom. The inside of the basket is lined with a plain paper, the sides being held together at the edges with gummed tape before the paper is applied. The edges of the basket can then be finished with a gilt braid on the outside.

A lampshade to match the waste basket can also be made from wallpaper. It should be mounted over a wire frame and lined with a plain paper. It will give a pleasing effect if this is veiled with a plain layer of chiffon. The shade also is finished around the edges with the gilt braid.

Desk sets of wallpaper can be made by the amateur. A sheet of thin glass over a piece of the wallpaper and bound with the gilt braid makes a good foundation. Cardboard boxes, for stamps can be covered with the paper, and a small piece of wood or cardboard for the blotter. The inkwell might set in a tray lined with the paper. It is not advisable, however, to have the articles which will be handled very much merely covered with the paper, as the color not only comes off, but the paper itself wears. A coat of white shellac will help, or a thin sheeting of celluloid can be held over the paper with a binding of braid.

Motifs from wallpaper can be used to decorate furniture. They are cut from the paper very neatly and pasted very carefully to the back of a chair, a screen, or on the front of a chest of drawers. The furniture is painted first, of course, and after the wallpaper is in place it is given a coat of white shellac. This is a handy thing for the woman who likes the painted cottage furniture, but has no ability for doing brushwork.

Do This With Worsted

HERE is a stitch that will be effective, worked in worsted on your frock or wherever you are planning to use the new wool embroidery. It will fill in a large oblong surface most effectively. Work from side to side with a short stitch. To be more explicit, insert your needle from underneath on one side of the outline, insert in thru the other side of the outline exactly opposite, but before drawing this stitch tight, bring the needle up again in the center of the design to be filled in, quite a little below the other two points, catching the long stitch and holding it down in a point with a very small stitch. Repeat at parallel intervals.

Some Hemstitching Hints

HERE is an effective way to hemstitch that does not take half the time of usual hemstitching because it does not require the pulling of so many threads. Draw two threads, leave four, draw two more and then hemstitch top and bottom. The result is most effective.

Towels and handkerchiefs are both most attractive with colored hems. Here are two ways of applying them. On a small handkerchief with a tiny hem it is an easy matter to apply a folded piece of colored material by sewing it right over the white hem and catching the edge thru the hemstitching. It gives an effect of having a colored hem hemstitched on. To apply a colored hem in the usual way, pull a thread a quarter of an inch from the edge of your material, fold your colored goods, machine-stitch one edge of it along the line of the drawn thread, then draw threads for hemstitching and catch the other edge of the folded hem in as you hemstitch. The machine-stitching is completely covered, while the applied hem is held firmly in place.

A Pretty Handkerchief Edge

SO OFTEN when one is in a hurry to finish off a handkerchief for a gift, it is not a very easy matter to remember any edge that will go quickly and look pretty as well. Here is an Armenian edge that is simple in design and will go like lightning. It is very pretty worked in a color with very fine thread.

Work right into the linen of the hem, beginning with a chain of six (the first three chains will serve as a triple) after the thread has been fastened to the linen. Turn and take a d. c. in first chain from hook, t. c. in next, d. c. in next and a t. c. in linen, chain 3 and repeat from the turn.

Another picot edge which goes quickly can also be worked up effectively with a colored cotton. Slip stitch into linen, chain 4, double crochet into first chain, slip stitch into linen again.

Repeat around the entire edge of the linen. This is one of those handy edges which it is well to memorize for any emergency.

You Can Tat With a Needle

SOME time when your tatting shuttle is not handy and you want to try something new, just take an embroidery needle, thread it with linen thread about No. 25 as smooth as possible, and try tatting with a needle. The effect is quite the same as the shuttle tatting and soon goes just as fast. Hold the needle in the left hand, catch the long end of the thread between the thumb and first finger of the right hand. Now double your thread, making a loop with the long thread hanging to the left and on top and throw this over the needle and pull tight. You now have one tatting stitch. Make four of these stitches and make a picot by leaving a bit of thread between the first of the next group of stitches. When they are pulled tight this makes a picot loop. Make a loop of fifteen and a half stitches (with three picots) and insert the needle into the first stitch made, drawing the tatted loop tight. Now unthread your needle and thread it on the other end of your thread and repeat, catching the loops together at the side picot as you work.

From a Triangle of Chiffon

TAKE a triangle of chiffon about forty-six or forty-eight inches on each side. Edge it with lace, a pretty silk lace edging about three inches wide, slightly gathered around two whole sides and to within twelve inches from each end on the third side. Attach half a yard of ribbon to each of the corners where the lace ends. Can you begin to guess what it is? Why the cutest little "matinee" you ever saw in your life. The side where the lace is attached for about twenty-four inches goes around the neck, the plain edges cross surplice style, the ribbons on the two corners tie in a sash bow at back, a little French bouquet of flowers ties the edges together under the arms to make sleeves, and the third point falls down the back and is held in place by the sash.

It's so easy to make and it is the cutest little thing to wear that you could imagine.

For Identification Purposes

IN THE average household, where there are a number of children of near ages, each without any distinctive style in his clothes, it is quite a problem to sort the clothes out after they have been laundered and assign each garment to its respective owner. Much confusion may be saved by taking the trouble to mark the clothes beforehand. There is an initial tape that comes for this purpose. It washes without fading and can be easily sewed upon the garment. Also, for white goods, there is an indelible ink that does very well for cotton, but with linen is inclined to fade unless the garment is treated by starching and ironing first. For finer garments the monogram may be used. This should not be more than three-fourths of an inch in size for all pieces of lingerie except the petticoat, in which case a larger monogram or initial is used. With night dresses, negligees and dressing sacques the monogram should be placed on the collar, pocket or left sleeves; on the petticoat, on the left-hand side front, a little above the ruffle. Where there is a yoke with the nightgown or combination, place the monogram in the direct center, front, of course, or a little to the left, and when the garment is made without a yoke, two and a half inches from the neckband. When the lingerie is of voile or batiste, colored floss of delicate tints may be used. Otherwise, white is considered of the greatest distinction.

Heard at the Red Cross Meeting

WHEN joining garments together made in separate pieces, crochet rather than sew. The crochet gives the same effect as the knitted weave, and prevents the garment from pulling unevenly.

To splice yarn, take two broken ends and threading one of them in the eye of a small bodkin, pass the bodkin thru the fold of the first piece of yarn for the space of two inches, so that the two parallel strands are intertwined into one piece.

In knitting socks, the most difficult part is the toe, as a mistake here means that the whole sock is going to unravel on the first excuse. The following method of finishing off the toe leaves no seam whatever. When the stocking has been narrowed down to a point where there are only ten stitches on each of the last two needles, thread the yarn on a darning needle and purl the front stitch from the front needle. Then reverse the darning needle, and knit the second stitch off back needle. Knit front and take off, purl front, purl back and take off, knit back, knit front and take off. Secure the end of the yarn.

Marking Linens

ONE can never hear too often how to mark linens properly. It is one of those bits of information needed in a hurry, yet always forgotten at the crucial moment. So clip this and paste it in your reference file—of course you have one.

A bride always marks her linens before marriage with her maiden initials. All wedding gifts, silver, etc., are marked with the bride's maiden initials.

A married woman uses her own married initials for linen—that is, the initial of her first name, the initial of her family name and the initial of her married name. Thus Mary Brown, who married John Harper, makes her linen after her marriage M. B. H.

CONDUCTED BY GORDON RAY YOUNG

"MY UNCLE BENJAMIN" TAKES UP RESIDENCE IN AMERICA.

Tillier's Joyous Story Translated, Presenting in English the Philosophy of M. Rathery—Mr. Ezra Pound Discussed by an Unknown Admirer—Poems by Glenn Ward Dresbach—New Novel by Gouverneur Morris—Book of Entertaining Stories by Roland Pertwee.

"My Uncle Benjamin."

SOMEBODY has remarked, or ought to remark, with that sweeping exaggeration that gets the meaning clear even if it is not [illegible], that only the French write entertaining stories. I have supposed that for a long time; but merely glancing through Willard Huntington Wright's really choice anthology of French stories, as well as spending an hour or two on a rainy afternoon to locate a paragraph in Taine pertaining to book reviewers and then having Claude Tillier's "My Uncle Benjamin" fall into my hands from the comparatively new press of Boni & Liveright, I had my suspicions confirmed.

The translation of "My Uncle Benjamin" is by Adele Szold Seltzer and the illustrations in silhouette are by Emil Preetorius. Of course it is a scandalous book, or it would not be what some people consider such. I quote the opening paragraph, which is quite shocking: "I really do not know why human beings cling so tenaciously to life. What great pleasures do they find in this rapid succession of days and nights, of winter and spring? Always the same sky, the same sun; always the same green pastures and the same green fields; also the same political discussions, the same rogues and the same dupes. If this is the best that God can do He is a sorry workman. The scene-shifter at the Grand Opera can do better than He."

But it is not the blasphemy that makes Benjamin Rathery, as presented in the narrative of his nephew, an attractive a character. Far from it. It is his utter disregard of the trivialities of life, of creditors, of poverty, of respectable folks' opinion, and all of the flubdubbery that we are trained to hold dear and punctiliously observe. M. Rathery is no rogue, no Quixotic idealist. He enjoys life from day to day, pressing the last drop of juice from the grape. If one has creditors and they do not bother him, one is the same as rich, says Uncle Benjamin; and his ready wit can persuade almost any tradesman to give him "tick," and if haled [illegible] for debt the same ready tongue will discomfit the bailiff; and if sent to jail, as he is, promptly come his good friends bringing viands and wine for a feast. He is loved by his friends. To what further eminence should man aspire?

This is the nephew's summary of Uncle Benjamin's attitude: "Like the rock whose base is beaten by the waves but whose top shines in the sunlight, like the bird with its nest in the thickets by the wayside and soaring up in the azure skies, so Benjamin's soul, always bright and serene, soared in a realm above the mist of humanity. He had but two needs, the satisfaction of hunger and thirst. And had the firmament fallen in pieces on the earth and had only one bottle been left intact my uncle, sitting on the smoking ruins of a cosmic body, would calmly have drunk down the contents to the resurrection of the human race."

That is the sort of a man one finds this young doctor in the French village. He is without money, not so much because he eats and drinks faster than his purse travels, but because none of the sick poor appeal to him in vain. And if he owes his tailor, it is as he explains to that half-witted cloth-mangler because the tailor and his family enjoy such continuous good health!

Uncle Benjamin has a crew of charming friends, particularly Dr. Minxit, a wealthy physician who has specialized in a certain form of diagnosis that passes almost for wizardry among the peasants; and it is quite amusing to see the effort of Dr. Minxit to annex Benjamin as a son-in-law, though he wants Mme. Minxit no less than she wants him, and except for a tragic denouement, this would be good farce.

The book is a roistering, quick-witted, penetrating piece of writing. If Uncle Benjamin must kiss a Marquis, the Marquis in turn must show like affection; and if Benjamin must fight a duel with a cocky courtier he first offers to do so at chess, but when pressed to cross rapiers, disarms his enemy repeatedly and sends him homeward in confusion. Some persons may find the book a bit tedious with philosophizing, but they are stupid persons—the sort who read the later Wellsian novels and imagine themselves being bathed in ideas. Mr. Wells, for instance, has taken pages, books, to say less forcefully what Benjamin says to the old sergeant anent the ingratitude and folly of an aristocracy.

Uncle Benjamin is a joyous fellow. He is what we would all like to be if we had his wit and courage. He passes himself off as the Wandering Jew, performs a miracle and [illegible] his sister's donkey's tail [illegible] of hairs for relics. He pays for a bounteous dinner with a kiss. He has impudence, philosophy and a wonderful stomach. A glimpse of his philosophy—which may, as I have said, bore some persons—is given in this concluding paragraph in which Uncle Benjamin speaks his mind regarding the anointed kings: "Because these people had a cross made on their foreheads with oil, their persons are august, they are majesties, and they are 'we' instead of 'I.' They can do no wrong. Should their valets de chambre happen to scratch them putting on their shirts, it would be a sacrilege. Their little ones are highnesses, these tots which a woman carries in her hand, and whose cradle could be put in a hen-coop. They are very high heights, most serene mountains. We would gladly gild their nurse's nipples. If such is the effect of a little oil, how much we ought to respect the anchovies that are pickled in oil till we eat them!" And there is much more as good or better.

"Ezra Pound."

It is only by guess that one may arrive at the authorship of this little essay on "Ezra Pound: His Metric and Poetry," though Alfred A. Knopf is the publisher. I surmise that Mr. Pound wrote it himself; for it seems not only to be quite appreciative of Mr. Pound's contribution to literature, but to understand those obscure merits that have baffled many people.

Though many are inclined to sneeze at such persons as write critical estimates of their own works, I see no reason why an author should not commend himself if others will not do it satisfactorily. Perhaps Mr. Pound agrees with my view. If so it will be about the first time that I have had the fortune to be in harmony with him.

The writer admits that Mr. Pound has not been popular; but of all the complimentary explanations conceivable this is the most commendable: "Probably Mr. Pound has won odium not so much by his theories as by his unstinted praise of certain contemporary authors whose work he has liked." It is true that Mr. Pound is very irascible in print, and seems to go afield seeking enemies which would appear to be a waste of effort, as, so near as I may judge, he has a-plenty who do not like him at each cross-road.

The author says there exists a third type of reader (after disposing of the other types as not being of the highest compliment to a poet) for whom the essay in this small book is written. The author disclaims any intention of forming an opinion for the reader. No. He very shrewdly presupposes that the third reader's opinion is already favorably formed, and then presents a bibliographical sketch of Mr. Pound's efforts, beginning with "A Lume Spento," which appeared at Venice, where "the author was able personally to supervise the printing on paper which was a remainder of a supply which had been used for a History of the Church."

We are also treated to extracts from appreciative critics, some of whom (felicitously, we are told) compared Mr. Pound to the Latin poets. Yes, it is true that these did not make use of rhyme, and I, for one, have no doubt that Mr. Pound would like to write in the vein of Petronius though as yet, publicly at least, he has not done so. Why should not this "Arbiter" do something with Encolpius?

We find, in touching the theories of poetry, that Mr. Pound has quoted "approvingly the dictum of Pater." No doubt at that the sweet-souled Pater nestled back in his grave as though a libation of unmixed Falernian had been poured upon it.

Also there is, in a gentle manner, an effort to expound agreeably the intricacies of Mr. Pound's metric merits; and we are invited to explore the various strata in Mr. Pound's development, and the inducement is held out for us to believe that it has been a logical advancement. This parting word of advice intimates strongly that Pound is for only the Herculean brained, for the deep-thinkers and savants: "When anyone has mastered 'Lustra' and 'Cathay,' he is prepared for the 'Cantos'—but not till then. If the reader then fails to like them, he has probably omitted some step in his progress, and had better go back and retrace the journey."

Indeed, it would appear from the disquisition of this anonymity that we have a poetic Kant in our midst, an amplified Browning as it were (Mr. Pound professes a liking for Browning; a kinship of minds perhaps) that, even before reaching the middle years of life Mr. Pound has given a mountain for the quarrymen of letters to work upon.

"In the Paths of the Wind."

Just what constitutes this "greatness" and "the best" that we hear so much about, I do not not know. I am tired of the words, tired of the people that use them, tired of the people that chase classics—these lechers out to rape the world's beauties and boast of it. There are so many people that talk about the books they are reading or have read for no other reason than a certain type of men talk about women. I have an idea that in time people will be chasing Glenn Ward Dresbach, not perhaps as a classic, but as a popularity. He may become a classic. Posterity, who makes classics, is a queer dame—a woman, of course, for there is no reasoning with her.

Mr. Dresbach, I think, shows the impression of the new poetic influences, particularly the one identified with Robert Frost, who was for a time in danger of becoming a fad, and who did something to restore calmness, clarity, sanity to verse. Mr. Dresbach has those qualities, and to a gratifying extent the vivid conceptions, which after all is what makes poetry worth while—at least as far as I am concerned.

He has not the verbal refinement of the scrutinizing polisher, and not at all the reckless impetuosity that flings ideas and words into one's face; and occasionally his similes seem hopeless. I can scarcely imagine, for instance, anything more inept than comparing a tornado twisting a house from the ground to a lion tossing aside a mouse. And I believe Mr. Dresbach was shamefully lured to that comparison by the rhyme. Indeed, as the vers librists say, rhyme has many sins to answer for.

It is not often that one may find in a new book of verse a dramatic poem of the quality that is in "The House in the Willows," which has not only atmosphere, but narrative simplicity—and, as usual, in narrative simplicity, there is a high degree of art; which may be why the hardest thing in the world is to tell a story simply, or write a poem simply.

These lines describe the poet's entrance into the deserted house by the willows:

" . . . I tried
The door. It opened slowly with complaint
Of rusted hinges on a narrow hall.
I called into the gloom of it and heard
My voice grow into something strange and loud;
And half afraid, I laughed at my own fears,
And heard my laugh go crazy as a bat
Into the darkness of the musty hall.
I struck a match and entered. To my right
A door, half open, led into a room
With dusty floor and heavy earthly smells.
Two half-burned candles stood in tarnished sticks
Upon a table and I lighted them
And looked about the room."

Mr. Dresbach has also a lyrical quality that makes the book more enjoyable than it would be if, small as it is, it contained nothing but dramatic efforts, which are nevertheless good; such as "The Sower Who Reaped the Sea," "Tornado," "The House in the Willows." I like very much the song on page 75, though the author has tucked it pretty well away among the "unconsidered trifles;" "A Mountain Nocturne" is a flower to hold the butterfly's attention for a time; and one of the charming songs is "Morn-Love," though it is not easy at first to harmonize "lover" and "clover," though it is well within applied poetic license. This is the third stanza from "Morn-Love:"

"And when the Dawn Wind dances
Across the clover to her,
The madness and the gladness
Of morn-love dances through her.
Her soft arms clasp her love,
Her lips to his keep clinging
While the heart of morn is singing
In the meadows of the clover."

I will go a little further than those who say that Mr. Derbach is a poet that will be heard from, and point out that he is being heard from; and he may be very emphatically recommended to those who care for the fragments quoted. They are characteristic of the book.

"His Daughter."

I believe that it is customary when writing a review of the later books by Robert W. Chambers and Gouverneur Morris, to drop a few inky tears, and raise the voice in a melancholy whine for the purpose of lamenting the great loss to literature that these gentlemen have brought about by refusing to live up to the promises of their early writings. Personally I think that Mr. Chambers and Mr. Morris do the best they can and that neither of them see any reason why literature should feel bilked.

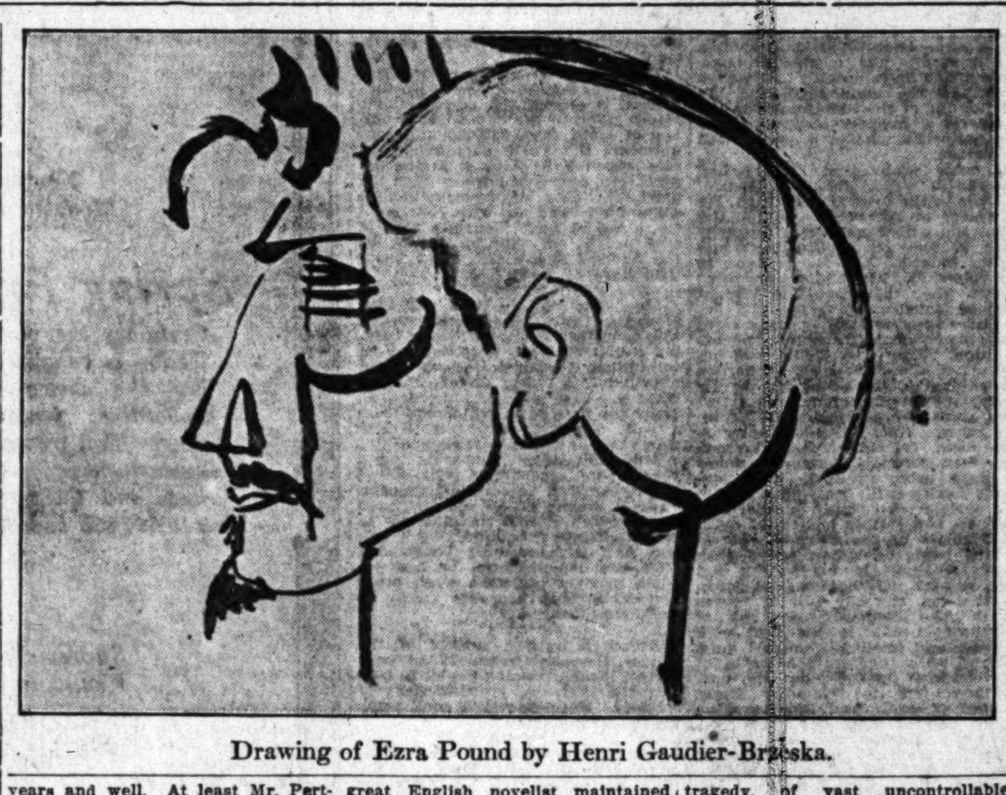
"His Daughter," which Mr. Morris offers to the public through Scribner's, is a very sad story of a young man "whose nature was refined in the fire of war." Every hero gets into the war these days, no matter how far behind the lines the author may remain, and most of them (heroes) gallantly expiate in battle some little sin that has embarrassed a woman.

Dayton is one of those cultured, "collegey," artistic heroes with whom Mr. Morris has made us quite familiar. A good fellow, but with a weakness for women—as though there were any men without it. Having flirted in Cairo with pretty 16-year-old Dorothy, and having in Paris more or less become engaged to her, he sets up a studio and lonesomely gets to work, while Dorothy and mama return to America. Enters Claire, a pretty French maiden with a "sensible" uncle. She lives with Dayton until his mother's death-bed cable summons him home, and that most precious piece of fictional machinery, the dying mother's wish, forces him to marry Dorothy. He worships the daughter that is born, and when they return to France the daughter dies. He learns that Claire became a mother, too; then develops the familiar, long-drawn and poignant search for the "wronged" loved one, conducted part of the time amid the war in which Dayton enlists as an aviator. He finds his other daughter but is forbidden to reveal his identity. He finds the other mother, but she is poised and calm. Faithful old, or rather, young, Dorothy sits waiting for him, however, and to her he writes letters telling how he has had brought down Hun birdmen.

A very sad story indeed.

"The Transactions of Lord Louis Lewis."

Lord Louis Lewis is one of the few "perfect" gentlemen; moreover a member of the English aristocracy, a connoisseur in priceless things, antiques, old china, furniture of a period. A gracious man, but never without dignity, a man of quick wit and poise. One may meet him through Roland Pertwee, who seems to have known Lord Louis for many years and well. At least Mr. Pertwee has written quite intimately of him in "The Transactions of Lord Louis Lewis." (Dodd, Mead & Co.)



Drawing of Ezra Pound by Henri Gaudier-Brzeska.

Nine incidents in the life of Lord Louis are related; stories they are, told with a grace and interest that must send one traveling far to find nine others in one book so entirely enjoyable. They combine a graceful, refined style with thrilling plot. The burglarous raid on Lord Louis in "Seven Khang-he Vases" has all the elements of detective fiction, including surprising ingenuity on the part of the thieves and daring on the part of the immaculate, dignified Lord Louis. And much of the time he is foiling rogues who fancy him an easy one to fleece because he is generous, interested in art and a ready purchaser. "Eggshell," "The Cellini Salt-Cellar," "The Third Encounter" relates how Lord Louis discomfited rascally dealers and brought down "poetical justice" upon their heads. "A Little Pressure" introduces Sarah, the young lady who marries Lord Louis's nephew, and tells how—inadvertently, though he was working for that very end—Lord Louis gained paternal consent on Sarah's behalf for the wedding.

Sarah is a dazzling young woman, sometimes embarrassing her utterly discreet uncle, as when she kisses him on the nose in a burst of gratitude, but more particularly when she requires a Buddha as a wedding present; and "The Guatama Buddha" proves to be—for a time—a very malignant influence. Further embarrassment from Sarah comes by her match-making propensities, directed in an effort to show her appreciation of his good offices in getting her married. This is related in "The Thirteenth Chair," a story that glides from light comedy into the book's only poignant, and an entirely artistic, story. I have called it the only poignant story, but that is wrong, for "The House at Bath" is, too, a tale deeply tinted with suffering—and even the rainbow's pot of gold at the end of Miss Brooker's long-drawn loyalty seems scarcely to repay her.

Lord Louis is quite an endearing character, excellently presented and sustained; and the stories are as gracefully developed and as entertaining as almost any that may be found in the realm of light reading.

WAR AND BOOKS.

BY FREDERIC J. HASKIN.

Have you found a book to read about the war that you consider truly great, and fit to rank with the immortal masterpieces? Most likely you will answer that you have not. Most critics and writers and publishers will agree with you. Why the war has not produced a truly great literature is the question which fills the pages of technical journals of the writer's trade, and makes a subject for endless debate.

Numerous explanations are put forward, none of them quite satisfactory. The best is the theory that it is too soon to look for a real literature of the war. Twenty years hence, perhaps, the writers of a new generation will take up our countless war books with their multitude of vivid, detailed impressions, and weave the spirit of them into a few great works which shall sum up and interpret the horror and the greatness of this war. But even this explanation leaves a good deal unexplained.

Everything seemed ripe for the production of a war literature which should set a new high mark for future centuries. The art of the making of books had reached a technical perfection never dreamed of before. The first years of the twentieth century saw hundreds of skilled novelists writing in France, in England, in America, the least of them more proficient in the mere technique of novel-making than many of the great men of Victorian times. Between 1900 and 1914 more well-built, workmanlike novels were written and published than in all the centuries that went before. It was recognized that the undefinable quality of greatness was lacking in most of this work, but numerous students and critics were ready to explain the lack.

The twentieth century was too mechanical, too orderly, too commercialized, too prosaic in a word. A great English novelist maintained that the perfection of modern means of transportation meant the death of literary art. Kipling to the contrary notwithstanding, there was a feeling abroad that romance was dead. Such tales of romance as were written had to retire to the South Sea Islands to find a setting. The civilized world was as efficient and unmysterious as a rip-saw, and the modern novelist found himself in possession of an unrivalled mastery of his art, a perfect command of his materials, all in a world whence the shy spirit that makes great literature had apparently fled. This is not to say that the twentieth century did not produce any great books. It is obviously true, however, that in proportion to the number of able writers at work and the number of skillfully written works published, a smaller number of great works could be found than in any previous period.

If the quality of twentieth-century life was responsible for the scarcity of great work, the war should have changed the situation completely. For the war brought all the missing elements, and brought them with an intensity and magnitude for which history affords no parallel. The adventurous warfare of the days of chivalry cannot compare with the routine of an air patrol over the western front on any fine spring morning. The national tragedy of France in 1870, that gave birth to a whole French literature, has been surpassed by half a dozen national tragedies in the world today. The horrors of past wars, which form the groundwork of a number of the greatest European novels, are completely eclipsed by what has taken place in Belgium, in Poland, in Armenia. And, above all, the element of heroism, which is the inspiration of most great war literature, has been a thousand times more in evidence in this war than at any time in the world's history before.

On the larger social side, it is clear that changes of unparalleled magnitude are taking place in the very foundations of civilization. The Renaissance was a period when important changes shook society, and the Renaissance released a flood of great art and literature that has never been equalled before or since. Yet the changes of that time were no more compared to the changes of today than the jar of a passing freight train is to the shock of an earthquake. If someone had imagined a war like the present war, and worked out its effects on a basis of pure logic, he would have inevitably included a great awakening in literature and art. But the awakening has not come.

One of the most striking features of the situation is the way in which many of the greatest writers are turning away from the war. In spite of the fact that the war penetrates the least detail of every man's daily life, and must change his whole way of thought and relation to society, many of the best books published in 1917, and many of those to be published in 1918, do not deal with the war at all.

There has certainly been no lack of war books written. At the Library of Congress a huge stack is devoted entirely to this literature of the war, and already there are more works ranged on the shelves than one man could read in a lifetime. Most of this work is avowedly transient. It deals with some infinitesimal phase of the war, with one man's experience in his niche at the front, with the reaction of an individual to some ripple of a mighty current. Much of it is work of a very high order. The twentieth century is far ahead of any previous period in history in its quota of able writers. But there is nothing that deals at all adequately with the great war as a great whole. There is nothing which unifies and interprets the vast conflict of ideals and world-passions of which the titanic battlefield is only an outward and visible sign. Three or four novels by men and women of international reputation have been written with such an object. Each of them is a masterly piece of work, but there are few who will acclaim any one of them as having succeeded in its large purpose.

Much the same thing is true of the drama and of poetry. The war would seem to offer even more opportunity for great drama than for great fiction. The elements of high tragedy, of vast uncontrollable forces working their will on man, which had been largely missing from the life of the twentieth century or at least disregarded by its philosophy, have returned on a grand scale. Yet, while there have been war plays in plenty, the great war play is still to be written. We have had well-constructed comedies, beautifully wrought bits of sentiment, breath-taking melodrama, and that is all so far.

The poets are in similar case. Many of the most promising of the younger men are at the front. Naturally, they write war-poems. With few exceptions, their war-time verse is hardly up to the standard they set themselves in times of peace. The heroic songs, the great works of epic proportions that would be required to do justice to the vastness of the conflict and the unprecedented intensity of the emotions involved, are not even suggested in any of the work yet published.

You can find numerous explanations of this curious relation of literature to the war. Yet there always remains a certain inexplicable discrepancy between the enormous forces at work and the littleness of their effect in the literary field. Great forces always break through sooner or later. The consciousness of that law lends a certain suspense and fascination to watching the world's output of literature from day to day.

RELIGIONS.

RELIGIONS OF THE PAST AND PRESENT. Edited by Dr. J. A. Montgomery. J. P. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia.

There seems to be more to religion than is dreamed of by the worshipers. In what way it strengthens or invalidates the claims of divine enlightenment made by any one cult to find duplication of its rituals and allegories in far-away, remote, even primitive localities, is for controversialists to wrangle over. In this book, written by members of the department of the history of religions at the University of Pennsylvania the purpose has been to give a brief, concrete idea of the dominant characteristics in the various religions observed by people of historical importance. It is not only surprising, says Dr. Frank G. Speck, who has contributed the chapter on "Primitive Religion," setting up, as it were, the background against which his confreres have painted in their heavens and hells, "to the uninformed to become aware for the first time, that in the conception of savage mankind the idea of evolution in nature, for instance, is an exceedingly old one; but there is an amazing and universal similitude in savage lore and cultured theology.

"Not from the mythology of one American tribe," says Dr. Speck, "but from the traditions of many could be quoted specimen versions in which a disobedient virgin gives birth by magical impregnation to a being who, at an early age develops the characteristics of a miracle-worker. Then, and after, in the same mythical hero cycle, occur episodes which parallel in a crude but significant fashion the episodes of the more modern Messianic versions, if we may refer to the versions of Christianity and Hinduism in this category. . . . We need not indeed halt our comparisons with these correlations. To every student of American Indian mythology instances of the occurrence in America of the following roughly assembled list of classical and Old Testament mythical motives are very familiar. We have parallels for the narrative of Joshua stopping the course of the sun, Jonah and the whale, Lot's wife, the Potiphar story, Cain and Abel (or the murder between twins signifying good and evil,) and the Flood. To cite a few instances from the classical field one might also mention correspondences in America with such tales as the animal foster-mother (Romulus and Remus,) Pandora, Achilles, Orpheus, Prometheus. . . ."

Then mentioning, with a paragraph or two of enlightenment, animism, totemism, fetishism, the taboo and the primitive ethics and the cultured hero, Dr. Speck gives way to W. Max Mueller, who writes of "The Egyptian Religion," and Morris Jastrow, Jr. with "The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria," and also "Mohammedanism," James A. Montgomery with "The Hebrew Religion," Franklin Edgerton with "The Religion of the Veda," "Buddhism" and "Brahmanism Hinduism;" Roland G. Kent with "Zoroastrianism," Walter Woodburn Hyde with "The Religion of Greece," George Depue Hadzsits with "The Religion of the Romans," Amandus Johnson with "The Religion of the Teutons," William Romaine Newbold with "Early Christianity," and Arthur C. Howland with "Medieval Christianity."

No attempt is made (excepting a brief one in the chapter of "Buddhism" which compares that religion with Christianity) to bring out the analogies of religions, but each is unfolded as fully as the limited space permits, very well initiating the inquirer in the subject; and the book as a whole must be a considerable surprise to those who have never before ventured into the study of religions.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

Bartimeus.

Lewis A. Da Costa Ricci chose the nom de plume of "Bartimeus," the blind man of the Bible, remembering his midshipman days when he feared the light had failed. Under the care of skilled oculists he escaped the terror of blindness with the sight of but one eye. Ricci is a paymaster in the Royal British Navy, and just before the war became known as a writer. When his book of yarns, "Naval Occasions," was published, Rudyard Kipling sent "Bartimeus" a letter of congratulations. A quarter of a million copies of this book were sold in England. "A Tall Ship" is another book of the author's. "The Long Trick" is his first long story, which George H. Doran is publishing.

Book Announcements.

Boni & Liveright announce for their second season in the publishing business the following list, which would seem to go far to substantiate their original announcement that it is their purpose to publish only such books as will have an enduring interest. These books are scheduled for late February and March issuance: "The Unbroken Tradition," a personal narrative of her experiences in the recent Irish rebellion, by Nora Connolly, daughter of James Connolly, the leader of the rebellion, who was executed for his part of it; "The Hand of the Potter," a new four-act play by Theodore Dreiser, which is to be produced in New York in March; "Men in War," a new treatment in six episodes of the various problems and phases of the great war, written by Andreas Latzko, an Austrian army officer, and now in its thirty-first edition in Switzerland; "Marie Grubbe," a historical romance of the seventeenth century, by the famous Danish stylist, Jens Peter Jacobsen (by arrangement with the Scandinavian-American Foundation;) a popular price edition of "Bernard Shaw—His Life and Works" by Prof. Archibald Henderson; "Sanity of Art" by George Bernard Shaw; "Not Guilty" by Robert Blatchford; and three volumes of plays: "Mariana" by the distinguished Spanish dramatist, Jose Echegary; and "Erdgeist" and "Pandora's Box" by Frank Wedekind.

West Indies.

The recent government order banning sea traveling for pleasure will not interfere with those who must take sea voyages to the West Indies or elsewhere for the benefit of their health, provided they can offer the affidavit of a physician that it is necessary. All such persons will find in A. Hyatt Verrill's "Book of the West Indies" (E. P. Dutton & Co.) much information on the health resorts offered by these semi-tropic islands off our southeastern coast. In our own possession, Porto Rico, are some wonderful springs, of which he says: "Near Coamo are the famed Coamo Springs, the waters of which possess wonderful medicinal properties, and here there are a large, splendidly equipped hotel, a sanatorium, and baths, surrounded by entrancing scenery and in a glorious climate of perpetual June." In his account of our newly acquired Virgin Isles he speaks of their one-time fame as health resorts and feels sure that under American government this important factor in their rich and varied resources will be developed again and much improved.

Beautifully illustrated with 32 photographs by J. SMEATON CHASE, author and traveler.

During the fifteen years since publication, in which "The Desert" has become classic, the need for handsome illustrations has been pointed out again and again. These have now been furnished by a lover of the desert, long an ardent admirer of the book. In a recent excursion into the regions described, with the text in mind, he took these photographs, worthy of the rare beauty of the text.

A Section of War

"You know, most everybody is writing on war or topics kindred thereto.

"And it's a great task, I've found, to wade through volume after volume to find the most instructive, the vital thoughts that we of limited time should pursue for knowledge.

"But, listen! I've found 'A Section of War' in that Book Store at Bullock's—that is to say, a section concentrant exclusively and sincerely on books of war—potent, indispensable works that represent a selection accomplished from a knowing and capable review of all War Books Published—each a treasure trove of enlightenment.

"This, I call—'A Book Service Pre-eminent,' for you make no mistake in any one you select.

"Not only did I find those popular best sellers 'Over the Top,' 'Private Peat,' 'All In It'—but also such offerings as 'The Topography and Strategy of the War' by Professor Johnson. 'The Foreign Policy of Woodrow Wilson' by Professors West and Robinson. 'The Land of the Deepening Shadow' by Thomas Curtin. 'Gallipoli' and 'The Old Front Line' by Mansfield. 'Inside the Russian Revolution' by Rheta Childe Dorr. 'The Menace of Peace' by George Herron. 'The Crime' by a 'German.' 'The Edge of the War Zone,' a continuation of that delightful book 'Hill Top on the Marne' by Mildred Aldrich—and almost the best of all a book which all lovers of books will covet for their library—'A Treasury of War Poetry.'

"These are a few I picked at random, but I found one—'A Yankee in the Trenches' by R. Derby Holmes that looks to me like the new 'best seller.' It strikes home. Get it and read it,—and while passing, just take note of this 'Section of War' in that Book Store de Luxe at Bullock's."

IN THE REALM OF ART.

BY ANTONY ANDERSON.

A Landscape by Rembrandt.

A drift of storm obscures the upper air,
And lower, glows a waste of dubious light;
It seems as if the legions of the night
Were slowly loosened from some cloudy lair.
Dim figures climb the winding cliff-path stair
And lose themselves in shadows with affright;
The gloom is ominous, and the inner sight
Sees half revealed specters flitting there.
The somber river lies as if asleep,
Save where the boatman with his vaporous oar
Troubles the waters. By the dusky shore
Two timid children stand alone and still;
While on the weird crest of the windy steep
Arise the white arms of the ghostly mill.

—[Lloyd Mifflin.

Landscapes by the Wachtels.

One of the catchwords in art, and one which you and I have heard a thousand times, is "arrived." We hear it stated, in print and out of print, that a certain artist has arrived, and we rejoice, for to arrive at his goal is the artist's aim from the very beginning of his career. He doesn't realize—no one seems to realize—that an artist never really does arrive till he has matured every artistic faculty at his command.

Comparatively few artists do that, though many are trumpeted as doing it. We have all been in the habit of juggling with the word "arrived" so carelessly that we have lost the sense of values. We have forgotten how to gauge, measure and appraise, and we thoughtlessly applaud the man with the box of tricks instead of the man with the message so important that it is signed with seven seals, all of which must be broken before the message can be delivered.

Perhaps I have sinned in this direction as much as anybody. At any rate, I have not always weighed my words in praise, and I have a fear that I shall not always do it in future. I shall try, but I shall fail through sympathy, enthusiasm, temperament, as well as through lack of exact knowledge—as you will sometimes fail, though your intentions may be the best in the world.

However, some small wisdom you and I may learn. We may learn to praise without once saying "arrived." We may learn to realize that the goal is set so high that it is not reached by every climber. We may learn to season our admiration with the salt of good sense. We may judge with the mind as well as the heart. 'Tis then that we "arrive" at an understanding of art, and 'tis then, and then only, that we may confidently declare that an artist has "arrived."

All of which leads up to a statement I am about to make with deliberation and forethought. The statement is: Elmer Wachtel has arrived. I said it yesterday, when I looked over this artist's wonderful new group of five pictures from Topanga Canyon, and I say it, quite coolly and advisedly, today. I believe this artist is reaching, and indeed has almost reached, his last, noblest and most potent word in art. Those of you who know him, and have known him for years, as a student of nature and a manipulator of the tools of painting, will realize that my statement means a good deal.

No western landscape painter has studied Southern California more ardently and more self-sacrificingly than Elmer Wachtel. He has remained steadfast in his allegiance from his callow student days. He has remained true to his ideal of art, and his great reward today is that he has arrived. No reward could be greater than this. Not money, not even fame. Wachtel has always done his best, and the best has come to him.

I knew that it had come when I looked at his pictures yesterday—and I was especially sure of the Topanga five, which were among the fifteen that he is to exhibit tomorrow, and all through March, with fifteen from the water-color brush of his wife—a collection of fifteen not far behind his own, be it said. The thirty landscapes of California by Elmer Wachtel and Marion Kavanaugh Wachtel will be shown at the Ely Gallery, No. 288 East Colorado street, Pasadena.

Further comment on these notable pictures will be given later in this column.

Pictures by Modra.

A scores of oils from the brush of Theodore B. Modra, the most of them being landscapes, are now being exhibited in the Kanst gallery.

Modra is an eastern artist who came to Southern California a few years ago, establishing a charming ranch studio just outside Ontario. It is a fine and notably attractive place, on the main road, and the studio, one of the handsomest in the State, is a favorite stopping place for motorists who love art as well as nature.

I could wish that Modra had shown his water colors instead of his oils in the present exhibition, for it seems to me that he handles aquarelle with much more dexterity than he does oil. In the latter medium, indeed, he is inclined to heaviness, and his shadows are often brown when they should be vibrant with reflected color.

There are, however, a number of pleasing things at Kanst's in this exhibition. Those that I like best are "Summer Clouds," a bit of garden hedge that is full of bloom, on the right, and on the left a row of formal garden vases filled with blooming roses; "June Day," another garden vista, full of charm, the garden seen through a gateway under a grape arbor in dark and luscious leafage, the sunlight turning the parterres blue-gray in color.

There is a certain bigness of effect in "Toilers of the Sea," a row of fishing boats on sallow sands, men busily hauling the boats high and dry, a pink sail against the green of the sea, the sky full of movement. "A Shepherd," a study of a man's head, is handled with breadth and freedom, though I must quarrel with the bitumen-brown of the shadows on the face. The out-of-doors fete in "Summer Night Frolic" is exotic and European, no doubt painted from one of the artist's old sketches, for he has been a mighty traveler. We see groups of people in gay and festive clothes, all under brilliant calcium lights.

The exhibition does not close till March 9.

Zuloaga Collection.

The most important one-man exhibition ever held on the Pacific Coast has opened in the Palace of Fine Arts, San Francisco, the great collection of paintings by Ignacio Zuloaga, the celebrated contemporary Spanish painter.

This collection has been exhibited in the leading cities of the East and has created a veritable sensation wherever shown, by reason of its rich, exotic color and extraordinary subject matter. The latter has occasioned no little discussion in New York, Washington, Brooklyn and Boston, where the ironical realism of Zuloaga was not always interpreted according to the Spanish point of view.

The collection was organized and brought to America under the auspices of Mrs. Philip M. Lydig and is being shown in San Francisco through the kind offices and guarantee of Charles Templeton Crocker. The exhibition is retrospective in character, including early examples of the artist's work which help to show his development. It comprises forty-two canvases, several of which are so large that they have to be taken off the stretchers and rolled for transportation. Every phase of Zuloaga's artistic activity is represented here—with striking figure pieces, daring nudes, great groups, as well as portraits and landscapes, all colored with his peculiarly distinctive Spanish point of view.

Among these are to be found some of his most important works, such as: The alluring "Women on the Balcony" overlooking the bull ring; the remarkable portrait of "The Cardinal" with its fantastic landscape background that reminds one of the arid, volcanic background in the "Mona Lisa." This is rivaled only by the full-length "Portrait of M. Maurice Barres" with the hill town of Segovia in the background; the great melancholy group, entitled "The Brotherhood of Christ Crucified," wherein the spirit of Greco and Velasquez are united to give a modern expression to the mystic soul of Spain, whose deeply religious fanaticism is no less characteristic than her famous bull fights and Carmencitas. Of the latter there are many, each breathing a different allurement, one more tantalizing than the other. Here are the debonair, alert heroes of the bull ring depicted as no one since Goya has been able to do it; nor has the face of Spain itself been more expressively depicted than in these landscapes of castle-covered hilltops, such as "Alquezar," "Sepulveda" and the morose, melancholy portrait of the little sequestered village of "La Virgen de la Pena."

News and Notes.

One of the most important exhibitions of the year, and one of the most interesting from many points of view, opens tomorrow in the Brack-Shops, to continue for several weeks. This is the second annual exhibition of the Los Angeles Modern Art Society, which is composed of half a dozen of our clever modern painters of Los Angeles, and with honorary outside members, who also exhibit—celebrities all—Robert Henri, George Bellows, Victor Higgins, Grace Ravlin and Walter Ufer.

Another interesting exhibition of the week is the one by Karl Yens at Exposition Park. It opened March 1 and continues for two weeks. In the present exhibition this artistic interpreter of nature shows none of his charming water colors, but confines himself to a collection of fifty oils, with four murals.

In Pasadena, Charles Louis Turner will show a number of his recent landscapes at the Battey Gallery, No. 294 East Colorado street, beginning March 4 and continuing to March 17.

The large collection of fine etchings at Little's has attracted so much attention from art lovers that it has been decided to continue the exhibition for two weeks longer than the scheduled time.

In the beautiful art rooms at No. 720 West Seventh street, Los Angeles, J. Bond Francisco is exhibiting a collection of a score of his new pictures, many of them very attractive. The exhibition will continue for some weeks.

Breaks Ice to Baptise Woman.

Trudging ten squares through snowdrifts knee deep in weather below zero, Mrs. Amelia Gresh, 40 years old, was baptized at 10 o'clock one night recently in the White River, near Columbus, Ind., after the ice had been cut away. After being immersed in the river the woman walked back to the church in her wet clothing. Her clothes were frozen to her when she reached the church. She is a member of the Pentecostal sect of Holy Rollers.—[New York World.

THE HELPING HAND.

"How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world."

Probably no war time charity in Great Britain, says the New York Herald, has received more favorable comment or accomplished a greater good than the Children's Jewel Fund, conducted under the leadership of the Duchess of Marlborough. From every section and colony of the British Empire have come jewels and trinkets, large and small, so that the means of saving thousands of baby lives will be at hand with the sale of the great and varied assortment.

The Duchess of Marlborough's necklace of pearls, clasped with diamonds, is one of the largest single pieces given to the cause. It is valued at more than $35,000 and connoisseurs the world over await the sale which will place it and other wonderful pieces of jewelry upon the market. Other large pieces include a diamond bandeau, with pearl center, given by Lady Henry; a rope of seed pearls, set with amethysts, by the Duchess of Rutland, and a beautiful tiara by Lady Essex.

Mrs. Thomas F. Holt, a Blue Mountain (Miss.,) Red Cross worker, who conceived the novel idea of turning rabbit fur into practical use by combining it with cotton and spinning it into knitting thread, has finished her first piece of knitted work from her new yarn, which produces a soft, strong fabric, smooth and warm and of a very durable quality.

Mrs. Holt, after gathering up a goodly supply of rabbit pelts, found it easy enough to pick off the fur, and by means of an old-fashioned spinning wheel had no difficulty in turning it into thread, mixing it half and half with cotton. What Mrs. Holt has demonstrated by her finished product indicates what other frugal and busy housewives may do for their country.

Although once a subject of the Kaiser, Herman Greten, 85, of Lancaster, Wash., is doing his bit to help win the war, by knitting sox for soldiers. His motto is "a sock a day for the fighting men."

An unusual addition to collections of the Missouri Valley Historical Society is represented by forty-five large ledger volumes recently sent to Mrs. J. B. White by Mrs. E. S. Jewett now of Hollywood, Cal., says the Washington Star. These ledgers date from 1869 to 1909, the forty years' residence in Washington of the late Col. E. S. Jewett, first railroad ticket agent here.

With minute detail Col. Jewett recorded daily weather records, expenditures, happenings, births, deaths and marriages, the latter being clipped from the newspapers and each carefully marked as to source and date.

A scrap book, evidently compiled in Niles, Mich., dates back to 1848 and contains many quaint references to the first improvement in the ox yoke, "in a hundred years," as well as much of interest to Kansas City, including letters from the '49rs, and F. A. Aubrey's letters to the old St. Louis Republican (the Republic) recounting Fremont's stay at Santa Fe and subsequent journey to California.

Washington County (Okla.,) Indians, members of the Cherokee and Delaware tribes, are doing as much to help win the war as are their "paleface" brothers and sisters. This is also true of the members of the Osage tribe, the wealthiest Indians in the world.

While hundreds of young Indians of draft age have enlisted or been drafted, the older men of the tribes too old to go to war are contributing generously to all war work in a financial way.

But it remained for many old Indian women to get into the war relief movement by helping in the Red Cross work. While many Indian women, past the half-century mark in age, are making surgical dressings, others are knitting sweaters, socks and scarfs for the soldiers.

"Umh, me help—me don't like Churmans," said an old Cherokee woman at the courthouse the other day. And she began to speed up in her work of making a sweater. Oklahoma Indians are giving up many pleasures because Uncle Sam has told them he needs their help.

The patriotic task of making and helping to design the furniture to be used in the convalescent homes, which the American Red Cross proposes to build at army cantonments, is about to be assigned to boys in the manual training classes of the schools.

A call has been sent out by the Atlantic Division headquarters to all Chapter School committees in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, asking them to list the schools and the number of pupils in their territory who are competent to help in this work. Commissioners of Education in the three States have been asked to co-operate with the Red Cross and to advise it in allotting the wrok to the pupils.

In the jurisdiction of the Atlantic Division, there are three cantonments—Camp Upton, Camp Dix and Camp Merritt. Work will be started there soon on the convalescent homes, which are to be called Red Cross houses. School children will be asked to busy themselves at once in preparing designs for furniture.

Boys from Sardinia.

All Italy is striving to pay honor to the Sassari brigade which played such an important part in the recent Asiago offensive. The charge of these men up the steep slopes of Monte di Val Bella was one of the notable events of the war. It has won for the Sassari a permanent place in the affections of the Italian people.

In their made rush up the slope of the mountain the Sassari carried their bayonets in their teeth so as to leave both hands free for hurling grenades. The Teutons remained in their trenches to await the impact of the charging men. Neither daunted by the strength of the position nor fatigued by the charge up the mountain, the Italians engaged in a fierce but brief hand-to-hand fight with the defenders, and not a Teuton escaped. All were killed or captured.

Shortly after the battle the Sassari, relieved of front-line duty, marched twenty miles to the rear. The brigade reached its destination in good order, despite the fact that the villagers along the way insisted on embracing the heroes.

A remarkable feature of the achievement of the Sassari is their lack of experience under fire. The brigade is largely composed of boys recently called to the colors, many of them 19 or 20 years old.

The Sassari is a Sardinian brigade, drawn from the large Mediterranean island just south of Corsica. Though Corsicans and Sicilians have long been famous in song and story, the Sardinians surely have not. Poets and romancers have given Sardinia a wide berth. The encyclopedias say that a great majority of the people are illiterate and that lemons and cheese are among the chief products. Now must be added a third product—heroes.

The Sassari take their name from a city and district in the northern part of the island. It is a name to be famous henceforth. It is a name that will give Sardinians rank with the Corsicans of the sister island as men who can fight.—[Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A windmill constructed from a wagon wheel and barrel staves, a gas pipe for driving shaft, and two wooden pulleys with belts, has been attached by a South Dakota man to his wife's wash tub. With this contrivance wind does not only the family washing, but also runs the chicken feed grinder, an emery wheel, an egg beater and a churn.

FLYER BURIED.

Funeral Services Held for Naval Ensign Who Gave His Life to Save Comrade.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CLAIR (N. J.) March 2.—Funeral services were held here today for Ensign Walker Weed of the Navy Flying Corps, who died Thursday from burns received while endeavoring to save the life of a brother officer at the Cape May aviation camp. He was married a month ago today to Miss Joan Masson at the home of her father, Thomas L. Masson in Glenridge.

Lieut. Charles D. Bennett, for whom Ensign Weed gave his life, is reported to be recovering from his injuries.

The accident which cost Weed his life, occurred while he and Bennett were aloft on a practice flight with the Ensign in the observer's seat. As they were about to make a landing, the crankshaft of the engine broke and the airplane became uncontrollable. When they were a few feet from the ground, Weed, with his clothing ablaze, jumped and rushed into the ocean, believing that his companion would follow him, but on looking back, he saw Bennett pinned under the machine.

He turned back and worked in the flames until he had extricated the lieutenant and carried him to the water. His death is said to have been directly due to inhaling the flames.

CHICAGO CAPTURES HONORS AT ILLINI.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHAMPAIGN (Ill.) March 2.—Chicago carried off honors in the relays tonight, in the second annual relay carnival of the University of Illinois by winning the one, two and four-mile relays.

Earl Gilfillan, Notre Dame, won the all-round championship over Lang, Illinois, breaking the record of Fisher of Chicago here last year by eight points.

Carroll of Illinois sprang a surprise in the 75-yard dash by beating Zoellin and Sol Butler, the negro sprinter, in time which tied the relay of 7⅗s.

By far the prettiest race was the four-mile relay, when the Chicago Maroons and Ames ran neck and neck for the entire distance. Otis of Chicago gained in the last lap and beat Stone out by two feet.

FRANKLIN FIELD PICKED FOR MEET.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, March 2.—At its annual meeting today the Intercollegiate Athletic Association decided to hold its track and field championships this year at Franklin Field, Philadelphia, on the final Friday and Saturday in May.

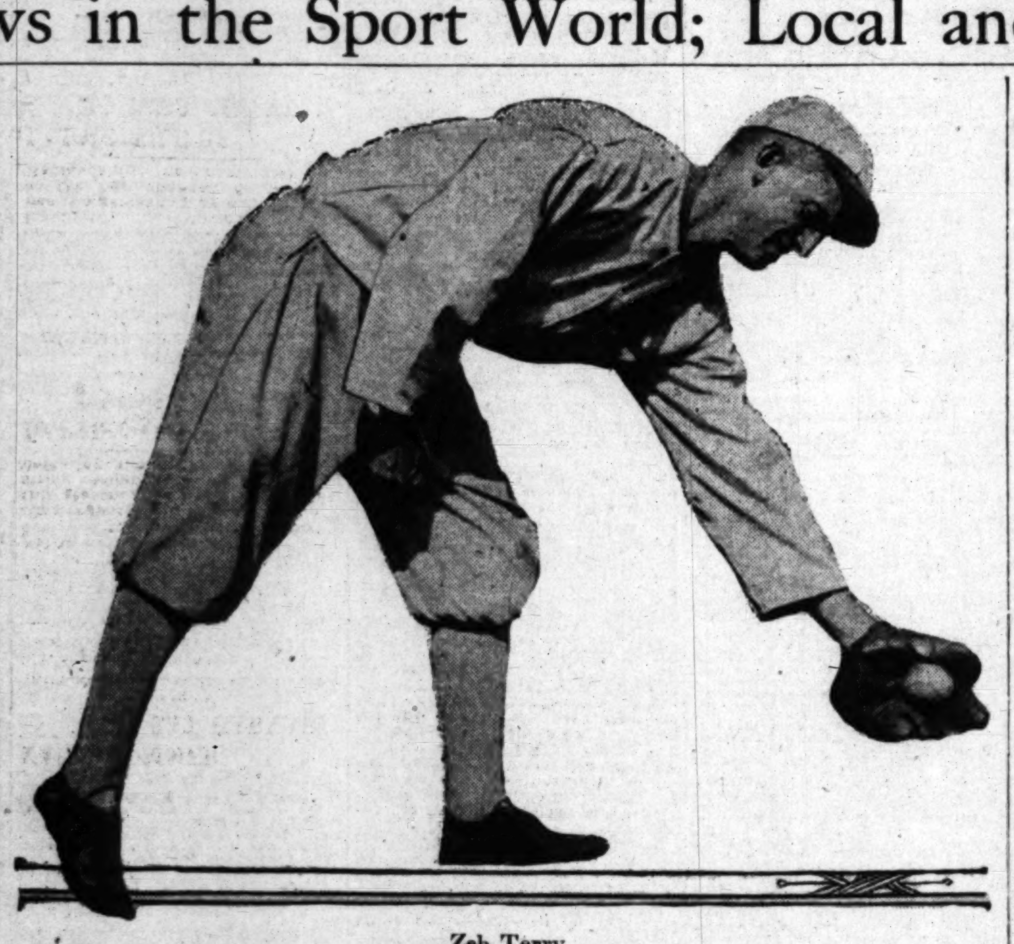
The University of Pittsburgh was admitted to membership recommended by the Executive Committee.

Stanford University and the University of California announced their inability to take part in this year's games, but this will not affect their standing in the association.

SCHUPP TO STICK TO M'GRAW OUTFIT.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

LOUISVILLE (Ky.) March 2.—Ferdinand Schupp of Louisville will again be a member of the New York National League pitching staff, according to an announcement today. Schupp recently said he had met his 1918 contract with a demand for an advance in salary. It is said unofficially that Schupp will receive $10,000 for the season.



Zeb Terry,

Shortstop of the Vernon Athletic nine which will appear in one of the concluding winter league encounters today. During the Coast League season Zeb drapes his classic frame with an Angel uniform.

ANGEL FAVORITES READY FOR SEASON.

ZEB TERRY'S WINTER WORK HAS KEPT HIM IN FINE CONDITION.

Chet Thomas, the husky catcher of the Boston Red Sox, and Zeb Terry, the fast shortstop of the Angels, are two stars who have been participating in the off-season games of the winter circuit. Zebulon can be depended upon to make an early showing for Wade Killifer's charges and it is predicted by those who have seen this classy little infielder in action during the winter months that he will have the most successful year of his career.

Chet Thomas, who was recently traded to Connie Mack's Athletics, however, against the big backstop's liking, is another star whose performance back of the plate has been of a sensational nature. It is doubtful if Thomas agrees to terms with the Athletic's boss, as he is interested in the moving-picture game, having established his home in Hollywood. Both Thomas and Terry will be seen in action today at Maier Park, Vernon.

OREGONIANS OUT TO LAND.

Coming South to Clean up at the Bowling Game.

Forty-five Five-Men Teams for Tournament.

Stop Off at Fresno on Way Back North.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

PORTLAND (Or.) March 2.—If Oregon bowlers and bowling teams combined do not take away some Pacific Coast bowling championship tournament money with them this month, it won't be the fault of the bowlers, if they keep in as good condition as they are today.

The crack M. L. Kline team, which will be one to represent Portland in the Los Angeles meet March 11 to 18, will show how highly developed it is tomorrow night when it will roll a special match game at the Oregon alleys against the Hudson Arms five, one of the strongest teams in the city which also will be seen in the tournament in the south. The M. L. Kline team will roll Monday against the Walk-Over boot shop team, the last game in which it will appear before going to Los Angeles.

Word was received today from the southern city that more than forty-five five-men teams already have entered the championship tournament, which assures it will be one of the best tourneys ever held on the Coast. The Portland pinsmashers will stop off at Fresno on their way back to Portland and participate in the California State championships. A $500 Liberty Bond has been put up by the Raisin City bowling championship committee, for the first prize, in the five-man team championship.

After that the next big tournament will be the annual Northwest bowling championships, which will be held at Spokane, in April.

The M. L. Kline team has also accepted the challenge of the Portland Alley team and will meet the latter after this year's Northwest bowling championship tournament at Spokane, in April, on the tournament alleys.

J. W. Blaney, captain of the M. L. Kline team, wishes it to be known that the team will go to Los Angeles under the name of the M. L. Kline team, and not the Portland Bowling Association.

YACHTING NOTES.

A convenient hydrographic chart of the improved inlet at Newport Harbor is being prepared by the Newport Harbor Yacht Club and will be made available for club members, as well as for visiting yachtsmen and other navigators, during the coming season. This chart will show the channel depths at mean low tide and will clearly indicate the course to be followed by vessels passing into and from the bay. The scouring action of the tide flow has so far deepened and widened the old channel as to make the inlet passage entirely safe for vessels of moderate draft, and soundings will be made and recorded from time to time so that the effect of the new jetty will be determined and made useful. In the preparation of these charts the yacht club has been greatly aided by information and data supplied by Leeds & Barnard, consulting engineers, of which firm Capt. Charles T. Leeds has the directing charge of the jetty work.

At a meeting of the directors of the Newport Harbor Yacht Club, held on Saturday evening, a complete set of racing rules, including rating formulas, percentage tables and tables of time allowances for both sailing yachts and motor boats, was approved and will be presented to the club at its March meeting for adoption. These rules have been prepared with great care and, while they are modeled in many essentials after the rules of the Yacht Racing Association of Long Island Sound, they are believed to contain modified provisions which make them better adapted to racing conditions on the Pacific Coast. The rules relating to measurement, classification and time allowance of motor boats are substantially the same as the rules of the American Power Boat Association.

INVESTIGATING COUNT.

Department of Justice to Decide Whether Minotto is to be Deported.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON BUREAU OF THE TIMES, March 2.—Department of Justice officials say that the only significance in the transfer of Count Minotto's case from the Immigration to the Department of Justice, is that there were no immigration laws under which the Count could be legally deported, and that an investigation is now being made to determine whether the Count's actions will constitute him a dangerous alien enemy and therefore a subject for one of the internment camps.

Count Minotto, son-in-law of Louis Swift, the Chicago packer, is at present at the latter's estate at Santa Barbara. He has registered under the selective draft act and is now in the next draft call.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, March 2.—After announcing his resignation from Columbia University today and refusing to discuss the reason, Prof. Ellery Cory Stowell, of the department of international law, later declared that he had resigned because his liberty of action in regard to the expression of his views on international affairs had been interfered with.

Prof. Stowell said he "could not pass unnoticed" a statement by Nicholas Murray Butler, president of the university, that "my resignation had nothing to do with the question of academic freedom."

INFATUATION CAUSES MAN TO SHOOT SELF.

LETTER SAYS SUICIDE WOULD "GO TO HELL" FOR WOMAN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

RICHMOND (Va.) March 2.—Letters found today among the effects of Mack C. Morris, insurance agent, 29, who committed suicide in his lodging-house here last night by shooting himself through the heart, indicated that infatuation for a married woman, whom he described as beautiful, caused him to take his life. Feeling that it would be hopeless to try to live for her, he wrote in a farewell letter that he would "shoot himself and go to hell for her." On a separate slip of paper were a few words directing that "Darling Lola" be notified.

Morris is said to have gone West last year because of his health. Two or three months ago he underwent a serious surgical operation in a hospital in Phoenix, Ariz., and was nursed back to health and strength by the woman of whom he was enamoured. Recently he returned East and obtained a position here. The woman came East about the same time and is now in Richmond. She and Morris are said to have met each other for the first time in a city in Maryland about a year ago. Before her marriage she was a trained nurse.

Because of his infatuation for this woman Morris is said to have become estranged from his wife, who is now at Hollister, N. C., with her little son, Billy Bryan Morris, 5 years old. Divorce proceedings were pending between them, it was said. Morris directed that $99 in his wallet, together with his watch and other effects, be sent to his son.

The bed clothing in his room caught fire from the discharge of the pistol, and his body was badly burned before the flames were extinguished.

The backyard garden movement conceived in the right spirit and excellent plan and effective as as it goes. The mere raising of lettuce, young onions in beds, which is as far as plan is being carried by many will not meet the serious of the present year at all. little bit helps, of course, and is no intention here to criticise movement or to mini- importance of whatever may by it. The thing that now, however, even in plan, is the backyard or that is planted to the food crops rather furnishes, and it is to be that what might be called the garden planting falls of what it might be. One thing and that is that the real producing possibilities of Los as a city are so infinitely than those unfolded by the garden movement that is no comparison between what done and what could be

Food is high, but the still seem to hold out in abundance, and that is all the aver- person can see. It isn't a question of lack of patriotism. What is lacking apparently is perception and foresight. With a proper equipment of the former, everyone would realize that a food crisis exists, and that Los Angeles possesed in its enormous aggregate area of fertile subdivision lands and its sure water supply a war asset of great importance. Possessed of the latter, people would be impelled to utilize to the utmost this advantage and to anticipate the worst that can possibly happen in connection with the food situation.

A Community Work.

What is wanted is not a planting plan fostered, encouraged and kept alive by a newspaper or newspapers, constantly appealing to individual patriotism, as has so largely been the case with the garden movements of the country, but a real, organized community farming effort sponsored by leading civic and business associations and by the municipality itself, a movement to which everyone will contribute what he can of effort and time. When it comes to a workable plan, one has only to look back to the big things that have in the past been accomplished in Los Angeles through organized effort. If this subdivision farming movement could be attacked in the same way and by the same kind of leaders, the plan would be forthcoming.

Once arrangements had been perfected for getting the use of the lands and for directing the operations, the plowing, seeding, cultivation and all the rest of it could go ahead. Los Angeles city and county have farming experts and advisers galore—and Sacramento could be counted on to give advice a-plenty without being asked. If all these gentlemen could not tell us what crops to plant, Washington would be eager to do so. If the thing was made a real community plan, with everybody interested, the labor problem ought not to present insuperable obstacles. There are plenty of retired farmers from all over the United States in Los Angeles to competently handle this part of it. There would be details to work out, many of them, but that is what the organization with its committees and officers would be for.

Nothing could be more appropriate and nothing better calculated to win the admiration and respect of American cities generally for Los Angeles than for the Mayor and City Council to take the initiative in such a plan and call upon the leading civic and business organizations to co-operate in it. Such a plan would rally the people of the city to the movement at the start. It could not fail under such a sponsorship.

Connell at No. 742-50 South Los Angeles street to the Sassy Jane Manufacturing Company, composed of Miss June B. Rand, Victor H. Levy and Sidney Chaplin.

The business in question was started two years ago, when Miss Rand began the manufacture of house dresses in her own home in this city, using a single sewing machine. At the end of the first year the business had grown to such an extent as to occupy about 6000 square feet of floor space. In its new location the company will have 13,000 square feet of space and will employ over 100 persons.

FINE IMPROVEMENT FOR SOUTH HILL.

MODERN CAFETERIA AND SHOP BUILDING TO BE STARTED THIS WEEK.

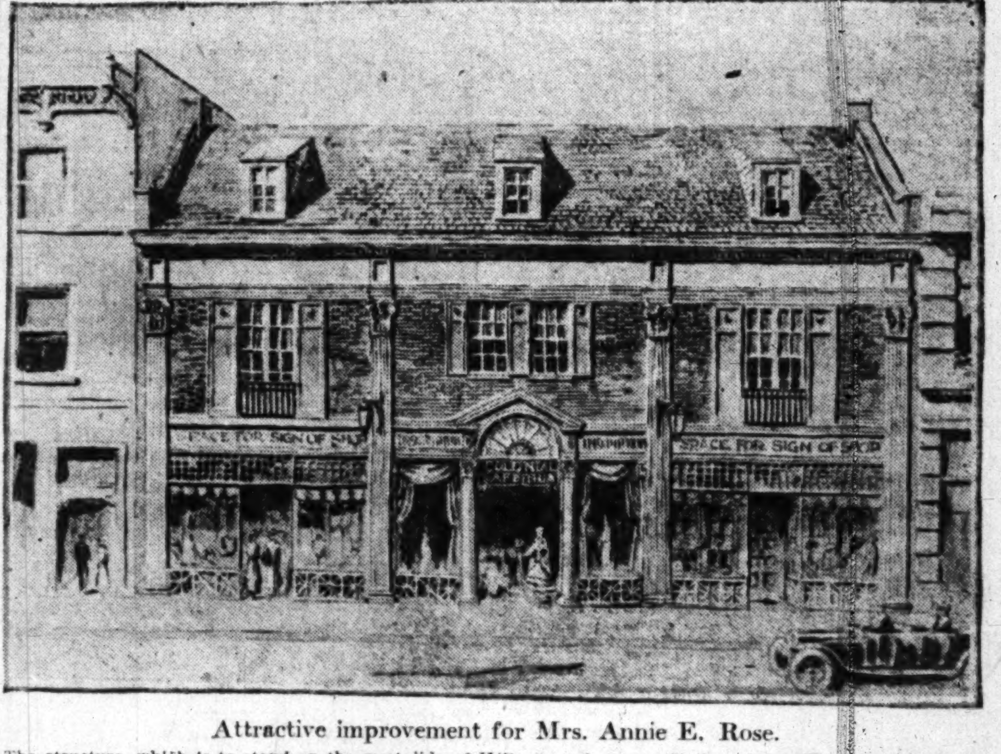
Work will be started this week on a modern and attractive building for Mrs. Annie E. Rose, on the west side of Hill street, between Sixth and Seventh streets, adjoining on the south the Victor Hugo Cafe. The structure was planned by the Milwaukee Building Company (Meyer & Holler) and will be constructed by this firm.

The building, with the exception of one or two small shops on the street front, has been leased through the agency of Metcalf & Ryan. The greater part of the space, including the ground floor and mezzanine back of the shops and a wide entrance between the latter, has been secured by Mrs. L. H. Wallace and A. H. Wallace for a high-class cafeteria. The shop to the north of the cafeteria entrance has been leased by Miss J. A. Truitt for a millinery establishment. Each lease is for five years, the total rental for the cafeteria being given at $40,000, and that for the shop at $15,000.

Architecturally, the new building will follow New England Colonial lines, both as to exterior and interior design. The front will be faced with silica art stone and red pressed brick, the sloping roof being of slate. The structure will have a frontage of sixty feet by a depth of 155 feet. The plans call for a basement under the rear portion.

The finish and decorations of the cafeteria have been designed with the view to creating a homelike atmosphere. A novel feature is planned in the shape of a small garden, with a bit of lawn at the entrance, through which patrons will pass, and which will give the dining-room the effect of being on an open-air terrace. The room will be lighted by means of an art glass ceiling dome.

Each of the shops will have a second floor space corresponding in size to that of the ground story.



Attractive improvement for Mrs. Annie E. Rose.

The structure, which is to stand on the west side of Hill street between Sixth and Seventh, was planned and is to be constructed by the Milwaukee Building Company (Meyer & Holler.) It has been leased through the agency of Metcalf & Ryan.

Progress.

MORE ROOM FOR WESTERN UNION

Modern Building Projected for Corporation.

Will Adjoin and be Part of the Present Structure.

Cost will be Approximately Hundred Thousand.

Compelled by the steady and constant growth of its business to seek more room, the Western Union Telegraph Company has entered into a twenty-year leasing agreement under which it will take over the three top stories of a five-story building to be erected next to the present Western Union building at Nos. 608-610 South Spring street, by Stafford W. and Howard E. Bixby. Plans for the new building are now being completed by Mayberry & Parker and work will be started on its construction as soon as the old three-story brick structure now on the site can be removed.

All negotiations for the project were handled by E. P. Bryan of the realty firm of Bryan & Bradford. Mr. Bryan is the owner of the five-story building now occupied by the telegraph corporation, and in connection with the lease closed for the new building has on his own behalf made a new lease of 20 years to the Western Union of its present quarters. Both leases date from March 15, and the total rental consideration for the two properties is given at $600,000.

The new building will cover a ground area of 40x140 feet, and will be of reinforced concrete construction. The street front will be attractively faced with terra cotta and pressed brick. The building, with its equipment, will, it is understood, cost in the neighborhood of $100,000. The three floors to be occupied by the telegraph corporation will be on a level with the corresponding stories of the present Western Union building and will be joined with them.

The growth of the Western Union's local business is strikingly illustrated in its successive demands for more space. The building originally erected by Mr. Bryan was three stories in height and the first lease called for the use of only the first two floors by the telegraph company. This was seven years ago. Within a year after the completion of the structure the company had taken a lease on the third story. Three years ago Mr. Bryan added two more stories to the building to meet the company's requirements for more space. More than 400 persons are now employed by the local Western Union branch.

The present Bixby Building was erected over fifteen years ago, and in its time was considered one of the attractive improvements of South Spring street. The structure is now occupied by a store and a saloon on the ground story, the two upper floors being used as a rooming-house. The contract for the removal of the old structure is to be let at once.

The new and modern building which is to replace this landmark will fill another gap in the Spring-street skyline, its cornice being practically level with those of the present Western Union building on the north and the Mortgage Guarantee Building on the south. Its location is directly across the street from the recently-cleared site on which is to rise the handsome new seven-story Hayward Hotel annex.

FOR SALE—

TEN YEARS AGO

"It looked like a desert,"

BUT

We bought 640 acres in

IMPERIAL VALLEY.

This we sold in 10 and 20-acre ranches at from $25 to $40 an acre. TODAY this land can be sold for from $100 to $300 an acre, where it is still unimproved, and is paying good interest on from $700 to $1000 an acre where it is being worked.

FIVE YEARS FROM NOW.

You'll hear people say, "Why I can remember when you could buy that COACHELLA VALLEY stuff at $25 an acre."? YOU can for a very little, now, be one of the lucky ones to say, "Yes and I bought some."

TWO YEARS FROM NOW.

After a thousand people have done what we want YOU to do NOW, it will be too late. There is only as much land in Coachella Valley as there IS. While time goes on forever.

NOW

We will sell on contract 10 and 20-acre ranches (no larger) at $1 per acre per month. Do you realize that the easiest way in the world to accumulate is to bind yourself to land?

THE "IF" MAN AND THE "I DID" MAN ADD UP DIFFERENTLY WHEN THEY ARE FIFTY YEARS OLD.

THE "WHY" OF COACHELLA VALLEY.

It ships California's earliest fruits, FIRST.

It's the finest date land in the world.

It's the only date land in our United States.

It's ideal for grapefruit.

Its onion crop last year brought $750,000.

Its soil is rich, warm, sandy loam of unequaled fertility.

Its diversified products, alfalfa, sweet potatoes, figs, almonds, grapes, melons, etc., yield astoundingly and secure the rancher more than consistent success.

Its semi-tropical climatic conditions make it most healthful.

Its schools and churches, and its general environment are most creditable.

NOW

Try hard and think where you can put $250 in 25 payments where it will develop into an average $2500 [illegible], or a future home.

It's "THE LAND OF YOU WON'T BE SORRY" and we'll be glad to give you maps and illustrated folders on request or any information you may desire.

DO IT NOW.

ALFALFA—HOGS—BEANS—POTATOES

Don't fail to investigate the special opportunity we are making to actual farmers on our special farming payment plan on Chowchilla lands where our alfalfa, potato and bean farmers are raising big money crops on their irrigated farms. Hog raisers are selling pork at higher prices than have ever been known since the Civil War.

To start farming profitably in this proven district, where a small capital with energy and determination will in a few years grow to a competency with comfort and leisure.

Our prices are still low and terms easier than rent. If you are interested and want to get started immediately, we will not only give you unusual terms but will assist you in getting started right. The California farmer never before faced such an opportunity for financial profit.

GOVERNMENT LANDS—
Relinquishments.

SUNSET VALLEY INVITES YOU—

To take advantage of the opportunity to free land offered now by the U. S. government. Tracts of 160 to 320 acres. No residences required. SUNSET VALLEY is a short distance from L. A., 6 hours by auto, on railroad and highway. The land is being taken up fast by farmers, business and professional people. Big improvements now going on. One settler in SUNSET VALLEY got 120 tons of alfalfa from 10 acres in 1917. Many artesian wells have been developed around 150 ft. depth. One well develops half a million gallons daily. Other wells 75 ft. deep with a lift of 10 to 15 ft. The land is level. The climate and soil are adapted to the growth of alfalfa, wheat, barley, rye, corn, apples, pears, peaches, apricots, chickens, turkeys, hogs, sheep, cattle, dairying, bees, etc. Now is your opportunity to start farming while farm products command high prices. We take you out and locate you for a very small cost, a sum which one acre will be well worth. This is no wild goose chase, but an honest, legitimate proposition to locate you on good government land. Come in and see photos of adjoining improved ranches.

HOMESTEADER'S BUREAU, 505 Hollingsworth Bldg.

I WANT TO SECURE A GOOD CLASS OF SETtlers and will gladly give reliable information to parties wanting government land where some of the finest farming, alfalfa and fruit land in Southern California can be obtained; and good crops can be raised with small outlay; in a beautiful valley, having good rainfall, mild climate, abundance of water, smooth, rich land, practically ready to farm, covered with bunch grass and alfileria, no rocks, adobe, hardpan, fine for alfalfa, grain, vegetables, fruit, dairying, turkeys, hogs, cattle, chickens, etc.; good school, postoffice and road; settlers moving in; big improvements being made; call at my store and see photographs and samples of products grown in valley. MR. LONG, 211 S. Grand ave.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

Yesterday's Times, in an article on the March 1 bulletin of the Federal Reserve Bank for this district gave the value of our farm products for 1917 as $432,285,000. This is a very substantial sum and would, of course, have been considerably greater had it not been for the shortage of citrus fruits. Fresh fruits were produced to the value of $40,000,000; citrus, $15,000,000; dried fruits and raisins, $35,000,000; prunes, $10,000,000; canned fruits and vegetables, $[illegible],000,000; olives and olive oil, $5,000,000, and nuts, $8,000,000. While California is known to be a big producer of apples, few people realize that we grew 1,225,000 barrels last year as compared with 650,000 barrels grown in Oregon and 187,000 barrels in Idaho, or more than both of these States, which consider themselves big apple [illegible].

Our production of beans last year exceeded that of any previous year and estimated at about one-third of the entire country, the crop was [illegible] bushels valued at $45,000,000. Below are the government figures of the most important crops of California for the past two years.

NEW YORK COTTON AT A STANDSTILL.

INTEREST IN PROSPECTS FOR NEW CROP CONTINUES KEEN; REPORTS VARY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK BUREAU OF THE TIMES, March 2.—The local cotton market today, after a week of fairly steady advances in prices, with profit-taking over the week-end and reports that the long drought in Texas was finally broken, was practically stationary against further domestic and export-trade buying. The close was steady, with March 1 point off, May unchanged and the new-crop months from 7 to 11 points lower.

The opening was irregular, with prices ranging from 8 points higher in the near positions to 5 points lower in new-crop months. October sold off to 29.62 in the early trading and the selling in this and other new-crop positions carried the entire market down from 12 to 22 points below Friday's close. Trade buying, on a scale down, however, came to the support of the market. There were further reports of better prospects for export tonnage, supported by Liverpool buying. Prices consequently rallied somewhat toward the close.

What purported to be the figures of purchases by the French cotton commission in this country in December and January gave the total of 75,000 to 80,000 bales.

Interest in the prospects for the new crop continues keen, but reports are conflicting.

Oranges and Lemons.

THE CITRUS MARKETS: WEEKLY TRADE REVIEW.

THE rains have slowed up shipping, only 182 cars of oranges having been shipped the last seven days as against 365 cars the previous seven days. The offerings in all markets have been extremely light the past week and the demand for California oranges far exceed the supply. Even with very undesirable sizes and some fruit frozen in transit and showing decay, the average f.o.b. returns on all grades and sizes are exceptionally high. Better weather conditions now prevail throughout the East and a marked improvement in the distribution should follow.

Many districts are rapidly cleaning up on navels and are now giving their attention to seedlings, sweets and St. Michaels, all of which are meeting with ready sale at record prices. In the auction market this week seedling averages ranged from $3.00 to $4.70; St. Michaels, $4.50 to $4.90; Jaffas, $5.25; Valencias sold at a wide range, best stock averaging from $3.80 to $5.25, while poor stock averaged down as low as $2.70. Average prices realized on navels are record breakers and range from $4.75 up to $6.20 for best stock, select sizes, with an occasional sale of frozen stock or fruit showing heavy decay, down as low as $1.85. Sizes 176s to 250s bring a premium and sell from $1.50 to $2.25 per box over the 96 size of the same brand. Price quotations depend on sizes and vary accordingly.

Many shippers look for a liberal movement of Valencias by the 15th of the month. A keen interest is being displayed and buyers are reported as offering up to 4½ cents a pound for Orange county stock.

Pre-cooling of fruit will begin about March 13, at which date the Santa Fe will commence operating their plant.

The market on lemons continues very strong with average prices ranging from $5.30 to $8.75 in the auction markets. The extreme high prices realized are due to the general shortage in the supply up to this time. From now on, however, the supply will be more adequate. Prospects at this time are for extreme heavy pickings during the next two months. Shipments have already increased as a result of heavier pickings and with a reported shipment of 100,000 boxes of foreign lemons that will be available for sale within the next thirty days, a lowering of the present abnormal price is looked for.

GRAIN VALUES UPHELD BY EXPORT BUSINESS.

MARCH OATS STRONG AND HIGHER HOGS LIFT PROVISIONS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, March 2.—Export business upheld grain values today notwithstanding fine weather likely to facilitate the movement of the crop. Corn closed steady at the same as yesterday's finish, with March, 1.27⅜ and May, 1.27. Oats finished a shade off to ⅛c up. Provisions gained 10 to 55c.

Some strength in the March delivery of oats resulted from the purchase of 200,000 bushels at St. Louis for export.

Higher quotations on hogs gave a lift to provisions.

HOME BUILDERS TO BE ON FIRM BASIS.

NEW PRESIDENT TELLS OF THE PLANS FOR COMPANY'S REHABILITATION.

The stockholders of Home Builders have elected a new board of directors, consisting of E. R. Jeffery, Charles Stansbury, C. W. E. Smith, Norman B. Worley and William R. Myers. Owing to press of important personal business, Mr. Stansbury resigned and E. H. Williams was elected to fill the vacancy. The directors elected W. R. Myers as president and general manager.

Home Builders' various properties consist principally of houses and lots in almost all sections of Los Angeles. Mr. Myers is also manager of the Myers Land Company, which has been operating on a large scale for the past twenty-five years. Mr. Myers yesterday said:

"Upon my election a thorough investigation of the affairs of Home Builders was made and we found that their gross assets totaled $844,160.72, with indebtedness amounting to $318,768.85, leaving an approximate net equity of $525,391.87. We found that a large number of holders of the company's paper were insistent upon payment; in fact, foreclosures were threatened in some instances. Also, past due obligations in the form of interest, taxes, street liens, insurance, etc., amounting to approximately $65,000 were found, and require in practically all instances immediate attention.

"With these matters cleared up, I am convinced that our receipts will be sufficient to meet all our obligations and keep us in good standing if Home Builders in the future can avoid making further unfortunate and expensive mistakes. It appears to me that any attempt to place the company once more upon its feet as a respected business institution capable of conserving its assets and protecting them from the onslaughts of its creditors, must be prefaced by an assessment that will be sufficient to pay off the money required at this time to settle up the items mentioned.

"The board of directors has ordered an assessment of 10 cents per share and hopes that all the stockholders will pay their assessment and stay with the company. I personally own a very large amount of stock, and it is my conviction Home Builders will be in such shape after the money on this assessment is paid in and used for the payment of these old debts that it will again take its place among the successful business concerns of this city."

NEW RESIDENCES.

Following are new residences for which permits have been issued or contracts let in the last few days: Twelve-room house for R. B. Cotner, Virgil avenue between Fifth and Sixth streets; nine-room house for G. H. Rector, No. 714 South Hobart boulevard; seven-room bungalow for G. V. Schneider, Thirty-seventh drive near Normandie; eight three-room bungalows for R. F. Carter; No. 117 North Fries street, Wilmington.

FOR HONOLULU TRAVEL.

Pacific Mail Steamships Now Permitted to Carry Passengers Locally.

A telegram was received yesterday by William Roseman, manager of the Ferguson Steamship Agency here, from the general office at San Francisco stating that Pacific Mail steamships now are permitted to carry passengers locally to and from Honolulu. The ships operated by this company are the Venezuela, Colombia and Ecuador, 14,000 tons, built in 1915. Instead of having the ordinary berths in cabins, these ships have single beds.

On account of being foreign-built, these ships previously were not allowed by the United States government to carry passengers locally between San Francisco and Honolulu, but have now been permitted to take care of this travel. This is expected to appeal to Southern Californians going to the Hawaiian Islands.

A WARNING TO MEN DEALING IN COAL.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, March 2.—A general warning was issued by the Fuel Administration tonight to coal producers that where they are selling their output under contracts made prior to the fixing of coal prices by President Wilson they will not be permitted to charge the 45 cents additional given to operators to meet increased wage costs.

The contract price whether higher or lower than the government fixed price, must stand, the Fuel Administration declared, except where contracts specifically made provision for changes in price to meet wage advances.

WAR LOAN DEVELOPMENTS GIVE HEAVY MARKET TONE

Bank Statement Shows Large Increases in Actual Loans.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, March 2.—For lack of a more definite reason, the heavy tone of today's stock market was ascribed to developments in connection with the next Liberty Loan.

Traders seemed to proceed on the theory that speculation would be discouraged pending the consummation of that project and sold freely of leaders as well as less representative issues.

Extreme recessions in special stocks ranged from 2 to 4 points, pressure being most marked in Baldwin Locomotive, Crucible Steel, Texas Company, New York Airbrake, Marine preferred and Atlantic Gulf.

United States Steel, Bethlehem Steel and Investment rails forfeited 1 to 1⅛ points and metals were under the adverse influence created by yesterday's reduced dividends for Utah and Chino coppers. Rallies extending from large fractions to 1⅛ points set in at the close.

Sales amounted to 265,000 shares.

The bank statement met general expectations in that it disclosed a heavy increase of actual loans—almost $52,000,000—a decrease of about $50,000,000 in reserves of members with the Federal Reserve Bank and a decrease of slightly over $45,000,000 in excess reserves, reducing that item to about $12,500,000, the smallest total with one exception since the new Federal system became operative.

Bonds again were disposed to recede on nominal dealings, Liberty issues, however, holding steady. Total sales (par value) aggregated $2,275,000.

United States 3s lost 1-4 per cent. on call during the week.

BIG MINING SALES FEATURE WEEK.

DEALS IN OATMAN STOCKS HELP TO STRENGTHEN ENTIRE DISTRICT MARKET.

Yesterday morning's session on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange closed a busy week. The reigning favorite, Tom Reed, maintained its lead in activity, but did not advance as much as on preceding days, opening at 159 and closing at 161½. The low on this stock was 156 and the high 165, the highest it has been during its recent activity. Gold Ore maintained its prevailing price of the past few days around 41. Boss Mining was fairly active, opening at 55 and dropping ½ point. Liberty Bonds came in for their usual amount of trading, 4's selling from 95¾ to 96¼, 3½'s to 97¼ and convertible 4's at 96.

Reports from Oatman are to the effect that the district is enjoying a stronger mining foundation than ever before. The recent strikes of several of the best companies and consequent activity and advance of their stocks, together with important property developments proving ore bodies to greater depths and the opening of entirely new ore bodies all makes for a conservative and substantial camp in which real mining has crowded out the unscrupulous promoters which every mining camp has in its boom days. The district now has more ore and bullion in sight and more new ore bodies than ever before, according to the reports. There are other properties in the district which have encouraging showings, but on account of lack of development have not gone far enough to find out whether they have commercial ore bodies. The Tom Reed and United Eastern have been big producers for some time and the fact that the Gold Ore Company is doing real mining will soon put this mine into the producing class. The Gold Ore officers state they are spending $10,000 per month in real mining work with very encouraging results.

TRUE OIL

Continued activity occasioned by unusual buying strength prevailed during the entire week, with prices closing yesterday around 5—5½c.

The popularity of True Oil is not to be wondered at, considering the many favorable reports from those who have visited and thoroughly inspected its property holdings, while the recent encountering of with the firm assurance of the driller that a big well seems certain, would indicate that True Oil, at present prices, presents one of the really unusual speculative opportunities for extraordinary profits.

Place orders early tomorrow, we predict that prices will strongly advance on the present move, while successful development—which now seems but a short time off—would mean the passing of an opportunity.

THE GENERAL MARKET

"Babson's," one of the oldest and most conservative statistical houses in America, analyzes the market as follows:

¶ "The investor who buys for income today has the opportunity of a lifetime."

¶ "With the exception of certain industrial bonds, there are few of the strictly investment securities now on the market which have ever sold as low as they are now selling."

¶ "Many investors have become discouraged by last year's drastic price declines. The fact is that we are now in a period when they should be loading up."

¶ "The minute that definite signs of peace come these bargains will disappear."

¶ "Plenty of investors will want to buy when peace is absolutely assured, but it will then be too late."

This analysis by such a conservative firm speaks volumes for the market opportunities now existing.

LOS ANGELES STOCKS

Especially Tom Reed, United Eastern and Gold Ore are very active and should have the attention of the speculative public.

WYOMING OILS

which are now generally selling at the lowest prices of the past year, present in many instances remarkable opportunity, in view of the strong market which is anticipated with the passing of winter and the resumption of activity in all quarters of its many fields.

NEW YORK STOCKS

continue strong and present many attractive dividend paying securities to which is added the speculative feature of "higher prices" upon any good news from the warring factions abroad.

COAST TO COAST SERVICE

We render "Quick, Satisfactory Service" in all markets, while our statistical department enables clients to thoroughly analyze any security in which purchase is contemplated.

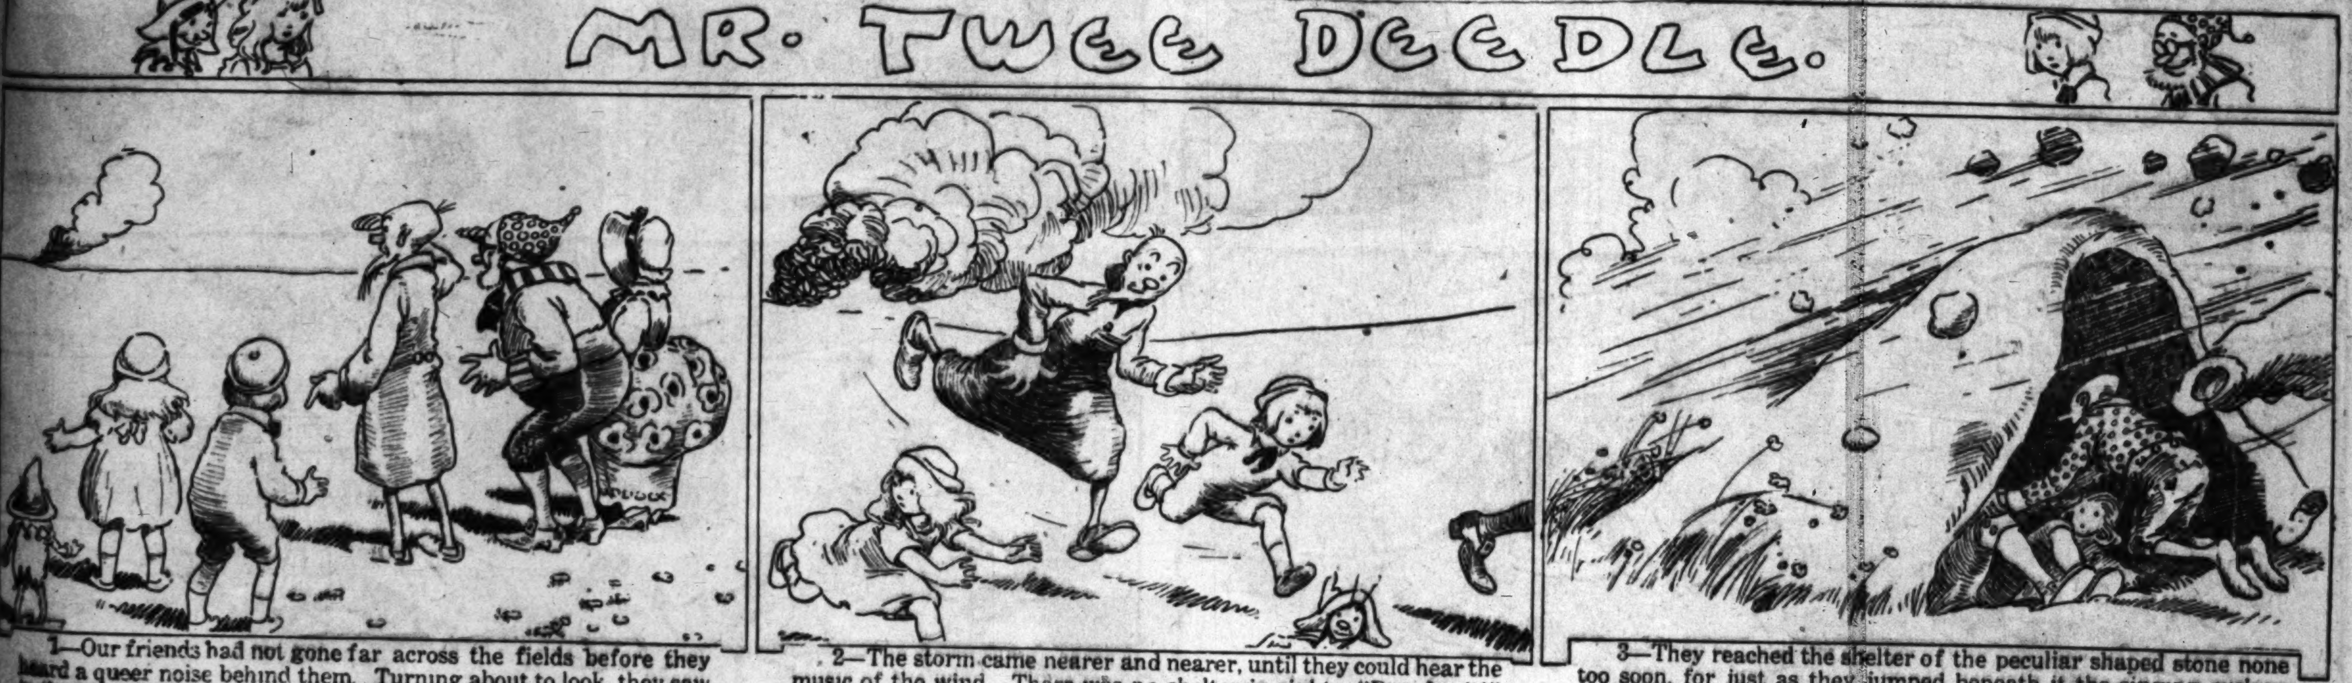
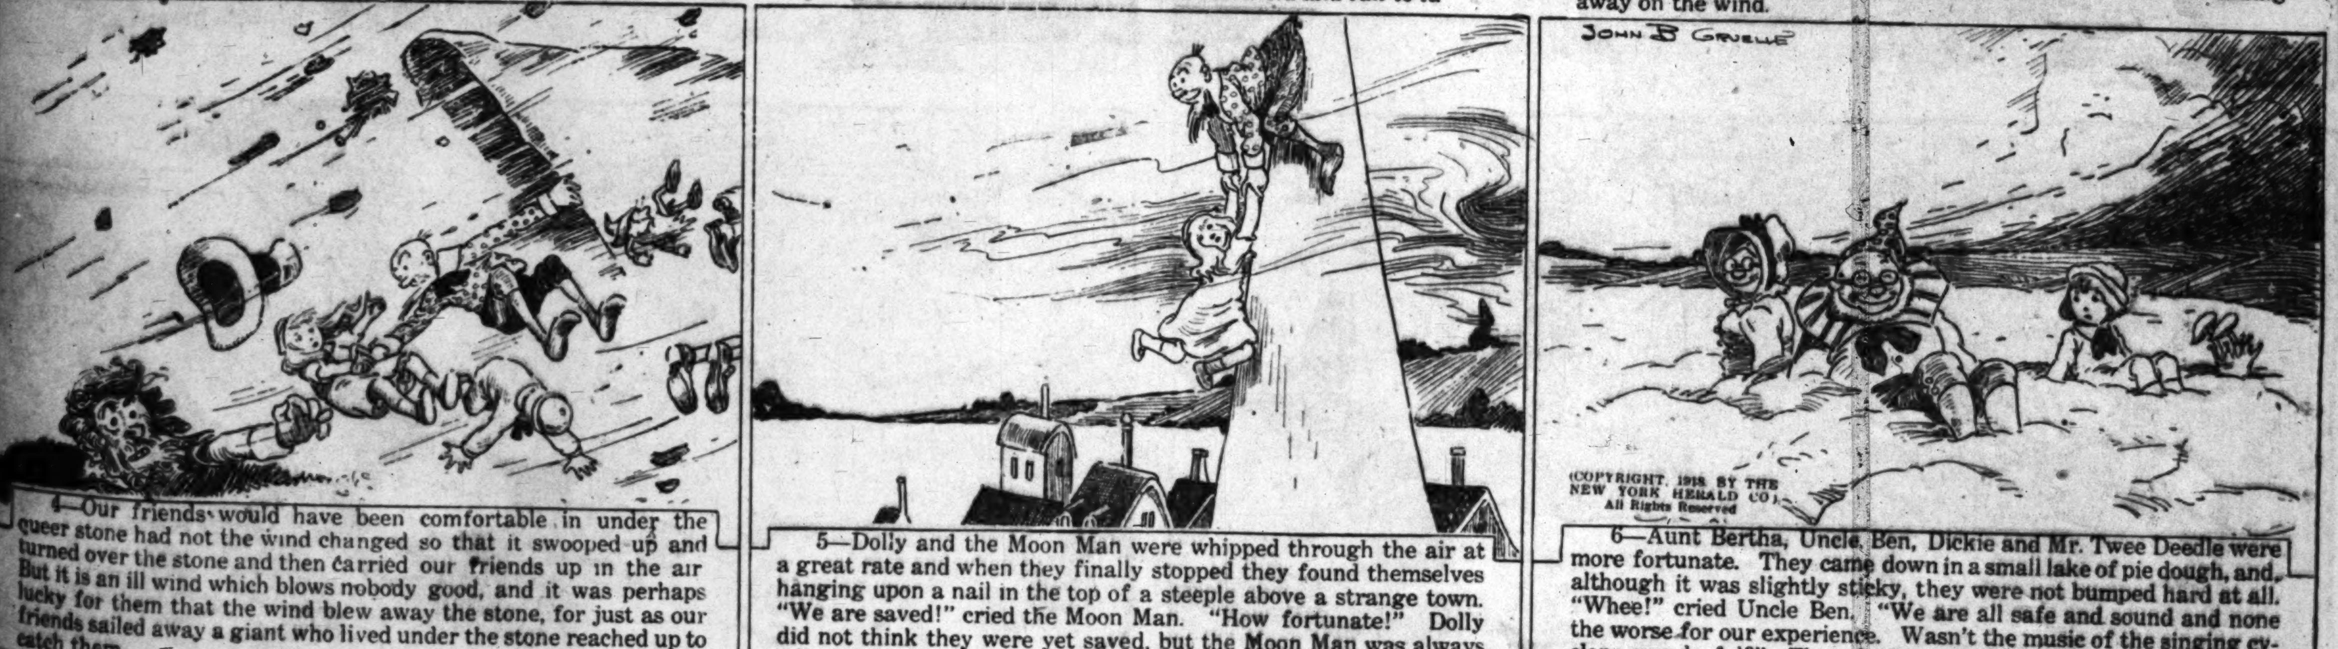
MR. TWEE DEEDLE.



1—Our friends had not gone far across the fields before they heard a queer noise behind them. Turning about to look, they saw in the distance a dark cloud whirling and twisting "It looks like a storm coming!" said Aunt Bertha. "Yes, we had better find shelter somewhere!" exclaimed Mr. Twee Deedle

2—The storm came nearer and nearer, until they could hear the music of the wind. There was no shelter in sight. "Run for it!" cried the Moon Man "It's a singing cyclone!" So our friends ran as hard as they could. The singing cyclone gained upon them at each step. At last they saw a stone in the field and ran to it.

3—They reached the shelter of the peculiar shaped stone none too soon, for just as they jumped beneath it the singing cyclone was upon them. It almost blew the Moon Man away, but Uncle Ben managed to catch his hand in time to save him. The Moon Man's cloak and slipper were whipped from him and went sailing away on the wind.



JOHN B GRUELLE
(COPYRIGHT, 1918, BY THE NEW YORK HERALD CO) All Rights Reserved

4—Our friends would have been comfortable in under the queer stone had not the wind changed so that it swooped up and turned over the stone and then carried our friends up in the air But it is an ill wind which blows nobody good, and it was perhaps lucky for them that the wind blew away the stone, for just as our friends sailed away a giant who lived under the stone reached up to catch them.

5—Dolly and the Moon Man were whipped through the air at a great rate and when they finally stopped they found themselves hanging upon a nail in the top of a steeple above a strange town. "We are saved!" cried the Moon Man. "How fortunate!" Dolly did not think they were yet saved, but the Moon Man was always jolly, so they hung on.

6—Aunt Bertha, Uncle Ben, Dickie and Mr. Twee Deedle were more fortunate. They came down in a small lake of pie dough, and, although it was slightly sticky, they were not bumped hard at all. "Whee!" cried Uncle Ben. "We are all safe and sound and none the worse for our experience. Wasn't the music of the singing cyclone wonderful?" Then, looking about, he discovered that Dolly and the Moon Man were missing.

Driving cars of the local Overland distributors broke a record this week when they brought 154 cars over the road from Toledo to Detroit in one day. This branch has been taking delivery of every Overland car possible to secure, and during the past six days receiver 347. The schedule for the present week calls for 400 cars.

The Ford Motor Company is well behind in orders in practically all sections of the country on passenger cars, and the cut in production due to war work from 3000 cars per day to 1500 cars per day, will cause a country-wide shortage in these cars as soon as the available supplies in branch plants have been used up. For some time Ford dealers have urged their patrons to place their orders early to take care of the demand, which they realized, and regarding which they were warned by the company, would exceed the supply if the curtailment came. Information from around the country indicates that the scarcity of Ford cars is already quite apparent.

The Willys-Overland Company is now "tuning up" for the model with which John N. Willys will become a rival of Henry Ford. Preparations are being made to put this car upon the market about September 1. It was exhibited at the National Shows and created a genuine sensation. No price has yet been announced for the model, which is fitted with electric lights and self-starter, and which contains in its make-up many novel features. It was supposed that the war might prevent the issuance of this car to the public this year, but a representative of the Willys interests gave the information that it would be in the market by early September.

Another large passenger car maker having received a government contract has reduced production to a minimum. The Chandler Motor Car Company, of Cleveland, has received a large contract for the manufacture of tractors. It is stated that this contract amounts to more than $10,000,000, and that it is for tractors of the heavy-duty type to be furnished to the Allies by the United States. The report states that it will take several years to fulfill the contract, and that it will require a large addition to the plant of the company.

The Maxwell Motor Company has increased prices. The revised schedule shows an addition of $80 to the present price of all passenger cars, and one of $100 to that of the Maxwell truck. This action, Maxwell officials state, has been made necessary by the increased cost of doing business, and curtailed production, due to shortage of materials, rising cost of labor and the increased cost of distribution due to transportation difficulties.

General Motors Corporation will have authorized capital of $200,000,000, when changes involving absorption of the Chevrolet Motor Company are authorized by stockholders.

Directors of General Motors have recommended that 282,684 shares of common stock be offered the Chevrolet company for all of its assets, except its 450,000 shares of General Motors stock.

This will make Chevrolet merely a holding company, owning General Motors stock, and at the same time make the big Flint concern a division of the General Motors Corporation, together with Cadillac, Oakland, Buick, Olds, General Motors Truck and Samson Tractor companies. This combination provides General Motors with capacity for 400,000 motor cars a year.

Reports that E. I. Dupont De Nemours & Co. has acquired controlling interest in General Motors Company are untrue. The latter interest is acquiring the motor holdings with the view of replacing its military business when the war ends, but W. C. Durant continues the president and the largest stockholder of General Motors.

GREASE CUPS SHOULD NOT BE NEGLECTED.

Many car owners habitually neglect the grease cups that are ordinarily fitted to the spring shackles for the lubrication of the shackle bolts. Unless these cups are regularly turned down, the grease in the passages becomes caked and hardened, preventing the passage of fresh grease to the surfaces needing it. If at any time difficulty is noticed in turning down these cups, they should be removed and the obstructing matter should be carefully cleaned out and then they should be filled with fresh grease.

WOW—LISTEN TO A FEW WORDS ON LADY DRIVERS.

LOS ANGELES, Cal.,
Feb. 27, 1918.

Editor The Times:

Dear Sir—I've been driving motor cars for about seven or eight years now and think that it is about time somebody took a good strong wallop at the women drivers. I have nothing against women as women, but when they get to driving cars on the streets they drive me off. I have lots of nerve and have never yet had an accident of a serious nature, but have had so many narrow escapes from running into others when trying to avoid deluded female motor car operators that a protest is in order.

I will take off my hat to one woman driver and she is Mrs. Wolfelt. The way she handled her car at Ascot several weeks ago was a treat and if anybody can make that Stutz perform on the turns and straightaways better than she did I want to see him. But then I regard Mrs. Wolfelt as the one exception that goes to prove the rule.

The average woman considers her knowledge of mechanics complete when she learns how to knit. The more intellectual can learn to ring a doorbell with a fair degree of assurance in three or four lessons, but when it comes to understanding an automobile they all have a vacant room in the attic, as the sporting editor might say, and the more you tell them the less they really understand.

This question of the right of way is in point. Personally, in addition to the legal "man on the right" right of way, I follow another rule of my own. It goes like this: "Railroad trains, street cars, motor trucks, delivery cars and women drivers have the right of way at all times." I follow the first rule because the policemen tell me to. I follow the second rule because I don't want to die till they get the Kaiser.

Railroad trains and street cars have the right of way because they put up good hard cash for it in addition to being so darned big that arguments are of no avail. Trucks and delivery wagons have the right of way because of pure cussedness. The majority of the drivers don't own the machines they are driving and know that if they go fast enough everybody will wait for them, hence they don't care.

Women have the right of way chiefly because they have their own way at home, when they're riding in street cars and elevators, when they elbow their way in front of you in a line at a ticket window and all other occasions. Therefore, why shouldn't they have the right of way on the streets?

It is part of the upbringing of the American woman that she shall do as she pleases regardless of the feelings or rights of other persons. We pamper her and pet her until she becomes as swelled up with her own importance as a poisoned pup. She doesn't disregard all rules of law and custom because she means to take anything away from others. Oh, no. Thinking of others isn't in her line. She has always had her own way in everything and regards anyone else's rights and desires as quite of secondary importance.

I have to charge about two-thirds of my tire bills to ordinary wear and tear and the remainder to sudden and violent application of the brakes when women take the right of way from me, make sudden turns or stop without signalling or perform some of the other feats for which they are both famous and feared.

I had a novel experience downtown this week that served to emphasize the nerve of the ladies. I was parked along the curb in front of a Broadway firm with about a foot of space in front of me. After stepping into a store for a minute I came outside to find my car jammed into the car ahead, only my bumper having saved my radiator and his gas tank from damage.

While I stood wondering what had happened a little newsie came along and told me that a woman had stepped into the car behind mine and, finding that she didn't have enough room to get out without a little extra manipulation of the steering wheel and gear lever, had moved gently forward and given my car a push with her bumper. It had broken my tail light and mutilated my number, but then—she had been able to get out with only one turn of the wheel. "Gee, she laughed to beat the band," said the youngster.

Women drivers are either too cautious or too confident. There seems to be no half-way frame of mind. The cautious ones go so slow that they jam traffic from one end of Broadway to the other while the confident kind cause you and me to run into other people trying to get out of their way.

There is no physical reason why women shouldn't be equally as proficient as men when it comes to operating an automobile. The main difficulty seems to be that they do not realize that in the eyes of the law they are not privileged to do as they please merely because they wear skirts. Selfishness and thoughtlessness are the outstanding characteristics of 99 per cent. of the women drivers I meet and until some way is found of persuading these persons to think of someone besides themselves men will continue to mutter under their breath and duck up the side streets whenever they see a woman at the wheel of a machine.

Hoping that you will publish this letter in the interests of humanity, I remain,

Yours sincerely,
FRED MURPHY.

ANOTHER CHANGE ALONG MOTOR ROW.

WELL-KNOWN TRUCK AGENCY GOES TO DOWNTOWN CAR DEALER.

Another change of vital importance in local automobile affairs took place last week, when D. F. Poyer, hitherto distributor of the Republic truck for Southern California and Arizona, accepted the position of vice-president and general manager of the Republic Motor Truck Company of California, and relinquished the distribution of the Republic in his territory to Harold L. Arnold, Hudson Dodge and Vim distributor.

The Republic Motor Truck Company of California was incorporated last week, with a capitalization of $250,000 for the purpose of assembling Republic trucks in Los Angeles to take care of the Republic business west of the Rocky Mountains. Officials of the parent company at Alma, Mich., George F. Moore, treasurer, and M. A. Holmes, sales manager, came to Los Angeles to launch the local assembling plant, and were successful in inducing Mr. Poyer to accept the active direction of the Los Angeles branch. Mr. Poyer has long been active in Republic affairs, being a stockholder in the Republic Motor Truck Company of Alma, Mich. In addition to his duties as general manager of the Los Angeles plant, he will act as district sales manager for California, Nevada, and parts of Arizona, New Mexico and Texas.

Harold L. Arnold, through his extensive dealer organization throughout Southern California and Arizona, as well as his city sales organization, will commence tomorrow an active sales campaign on the Republic.

CHARCOAL AND COAL OIL HANDY RECIPE.

It is not very generally known that powdered charcoal mixed with kerosene oil makes a very satisfactory grinding compound in the absence of the regular product. The mixture is applied in the regular way and grinding carried out just as with ordinary grinding compounds. The charcoal produces a very fine surface, and, unless the valves are in unusually bad condition, requires little more time than the regular compounds.

USED CARS HELP OUT AUSTRALIA SHORTAGE.

One aspect of the shortage of motor cars in Australia is the enormous increase in the price of used cars. There are many used cars of both American and European origin selling at a much higher price than they originally sold as new machines. This is helping the dealers out very materially.

So far Australia is not confronted with any gasoline famine, in fact, no fear is expressed at this time of any fuel shortage.

EXTERIOR BATTERIES EASIEST TO HANDLE.

Batteries that are located under the floor boards or in the body always cause considerable confusion in servicing, as it makes it necessary for the car occupants to leave the car, to have the battery watered. Also, it invariably requires the services of two men to handle a battery which is isolated, while an exterior location saves time and can be handled by one service man.

Be Careful.

TIPS OF AUTO THIEF GRABBER.

Latest Method to Keep Your Car Safe.

It's Your Own Fault if You Don't Watch Out.

Officials Always Striving to Help You.

There have been confessions of reformed auto thieves, but here is the first honest-to-goodness confession of a dyed-in-the-wool auto thief catcher.

He has personally escorted 130 automobile thieves to the jug, and he has recovered 675 stolen cars. He's a bad hombre for the nickers of other people's machines to run up against, because he knows every trick of the trade and there are a few he knows not on the books.

He is the chief detective of the theft bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California engaged in stamping out thefts, and for the benefit of the motorists who read this story he tells the latest and best things to do to keep a car from being stolen and the best things to do to get it back if it has once been swiped. His name is John Powell and he's too big and hefty to be called Johnny, so light'er up and listen to his words of wisdom.

When will automobile stealing cease here? That is the first question any investigator of the facts asks now, and Powell states that this phenomenon will come to pass when the manufacturers adopt a good tumbler lock with a different key for each lock, to take the place of cheap locks now used on 50 per cent. of the automobiles manufactured.

Statistics prepared by the theft bureau of the Automobile Club show that cars properly equipped with these tumbler locks, when properly locked, are seldom stolen. Accessory stores and garages have keys in stock that can be used on 50 per cent. of the locks now found on automobiles, it is pointed out, and these are available for the thieves at any time.

THE ADVICE.

Every owner, when his car is stolen, naturally reports the matter to the authorities, but the majority are unable to give the necessary data to aid materially in the recov-

PAIGE
Let Me Tell You Something!

"If you buy a car that has the real automobile value that will compare with Paige value, you certainly will have to pay a whole lot more money for it. This has been demonstrated by the most careful comparisons and unusually hard tests. Paige stamina is recognized everywhere and Paige dependability is of a kind which more money cannot purchase."

A close inspection of the distinctive features found only in the Paige will easily prove to thoughtful buyers that Paige popularity is well founded.

All models properly priced and the price has not been raised as yet. All open and enclosed bodies ready for immediate delivery.

PACKARD DISTILLATE TRUCKS

Packards open the overland way for army truck trains—from the Lakes to the sea.

Cross country under load, an army truck train of thirty Packards has triumphantly finished the long winter journey—542 miles—from Detroit to Baltimore.

To relieve railroad congestion, to save freight charges and to speed up delivery was the triple purpose of the test. And Packard road mastery was proved so decisively that six more trains are now on the way.

With unseasoned drivers, these pioneer Packards started in a blizzard — broke their own trail — bucked snow-drifts — navigated mud—climbed mountains. They averaged forty-eight miles a day and finished ready for service.

Here the army shows the way to business men. Why use a freight car if a truck will move your goods? Help lift the nation's load—and your own burden—today. Burning low-price distillate instead of gasoline, Packard trucks are quick, sure, cheap.

Quicksand and Snow Make Bakersfield Trip Eventful.

Rough Travel.

TWIN SIXES ARE FRIENDS.

Stages Pull Cars Out of the Quicksands.

Good Samaritan Acts are Rule of Road.

Travel is Now Safe to Bakersfield.

There is still a great deal of snow on the Tejon Mountains along the road between Los Angeles and Bakersfield, but travel is safe though somewhat uncomfortable on account of deep mud and cross washes on the dirt road through Bouquet Canyon, and through the Antelope Valley.

Bouquet Canyon road proved itself able to withstand the ravages of the heavy rains and except for slippery surfaces and some masses of lock rock that rolled off the hills there are no difficulties that should bar the average driver from making the trip.

Between the north end of the canyon and Bailey's ranch, where the highway is encountered again, there is considerable mud and it is dangerous to leave the beaten track for the sides of the road prove veritable quagmires, and any car that gets off to one side too far to let other vehicles pass, is due to become stalled.

Quite a number of drivers found that as soon as they pulled to one side that the rear end of the cars would sink to the hubs and all traction would be lost. Digging out is almost impossible as the water-soaked soil fills in almost as fast as a shovel can remove it.

WAITING.

After the big snow storm of ten days ago, ten cars were waiting at Tom O'Brien's Lebec Hotel for some one to break the road over the Tejon summit, between Lebec and Gorman's station.

Nearly a score of motorists besieged the office of the Eldorado stage company in Bakersfield to learn the condition of the road and when the first Packard stage would be sent through to Los Angeles. With its departure ten or twelve of them started, and from Lebec at least a score followed through the path broken by the big twin six stage.

The snow has drifted three feet deep in some of the cuts, but the stage bucked through without difficulty. The real difficulties began when Gorman station was reached for at that point heavy rains had washed tons of gravel over the concrete pavement and the water that came down with it made it a bed of quicksand.

In some places the State highway fences alongside the pavement were buried up to the top rail and it was only by sending the stage over the top at high speed, so that it had no time to settle in the quicksands that it was possible to negotiate the slides.

FOLLOW QUICKLY.

As soon as the Eldorado cars had proven that the road was negotiable others followed quickly in their path and traffic was resumed. From Bailey's Ranch to the north end of the Bouquet Canyon, the road is a succession of mudholes and cross cuts, washed out by the water, but a firm base makes travel safe, except on a few of the hills where adobe soil makes the surface treacherous and slow driving imperative to avoid disaster.

There is some snow on the hills at the north end of the Ridge route, but that road is not advisable until it dries out at the south end where there is a difficult detour of five miles. Even when dry it will not be advisable to travel north over that road, but it can be made coming south.

With the exception of one day, when the superintendent of the State highway maintenance crew reported the road blocked by stalled cars, the Eldorado has maintained its regular service. The maintenance crew is made up of a score or more of men and a number of teams and they have been removing the slides from the road and filling the holes where the pavement was undermined. They have cheerfully gone to the assistance of motorists who have become stalled within reasonable distance of the places where the crews were at work.

HELP OUT.

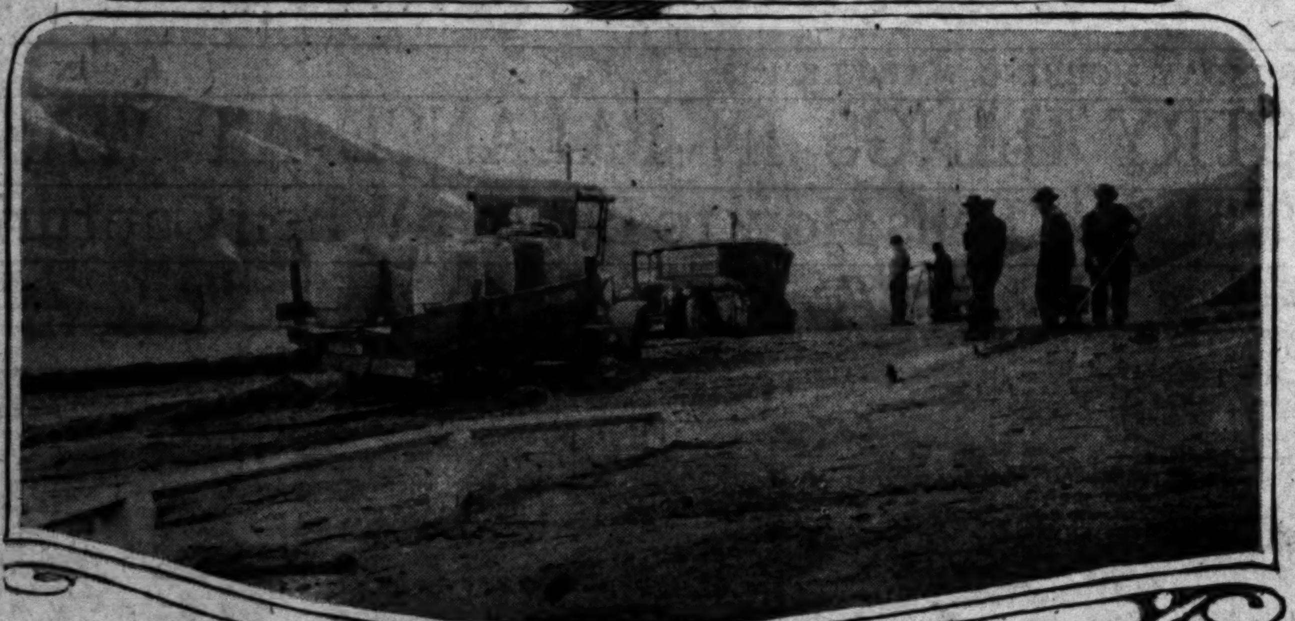
Under orders from Sidney Mims, general manager of the Eldorado line, all drivers have been acting as good Samaritans to motorists in trouble. There has seldom been a trip when they have not hooked one of the twin six Packards on some car and pulled it back into the road or dragged it from where it was stalled in the quicksands. These acts of kindness have done more to delay the cars than the road conditions.

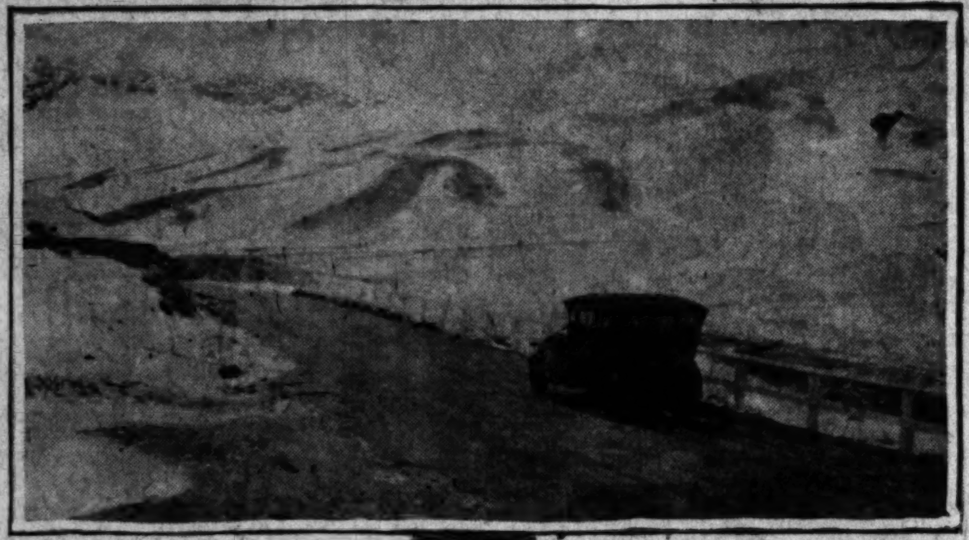
The prompt work of the highway crews in clearing the road has prevented any serious interruption of traffic and there are scores of cars making the trip in either direction every day.

The service that can be maintained by the Eldorado over a road of such distance and natural difficulties as that between Los Angeles and Bakersfield, speaks volumes of praise for the highway system and the high plane of stage transportation in Southern California.

1000 RACE TRACKS.

It is estimated there are over 1000 race tracks where lift harness events are staged in the United States and Canada.





Difficulties between Los Angeles and Bakersfield.

Here are a couple of photographs taken last week showing the route traveled by the Packard twin-six stages. The upper view gives an idea of the landslide of quicksand which swept across the Boquet Canyon road and blocked things for awhile. The lower photograph looks like Siberia but is Southern California.

LATE ROAD CONDITIONS.

HERE is a general outline of road conditions in this part of the State, issued by the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California. Motorists planning tours of any length are advised to get in touch with the club and secure more detailed information:

COAST ROUTE NORTH—This route has not fully recovered from the effects of the recent rains, but by Monday, March 4, if fair weather continues, it will be in normal condition. Pavement is complete from Los Angeles to Naples, fifteen miles north of Santa Barbara, from that point north to Gaviota the road is closed just now on account of mud, but will probably be open very shortly as road gangs are at work with full force. The San Marcos Pass road, from Goleta to Los Olivas, is also closed on account of the recent rains—which caused several washouts—these are being rapidly repaired and the road will soon be open. From Gaviota to a point one-half mile beyond Los Cruces the road is paved; thence muddy road (passable) to beginning of pavement four miles beyond Zaca. Thence paved north to the San Luis Obispo county line with the exception of a short stretch between Divide and Orcutt. From the county line to Arroyo Grande, cars are getting through with difficulty; this section was in very bad condition during the recent rains, but is rapidly improving with prevailing dry weather. Pavement complete from Arroyo Grande north to the Monterey county line via San Luis Obispo and Paso Robles; from here dirt road to San Ardo except ten miles of pavement. From San Ardo north through King City to a point three miles south of Greenfield the road is not paved and was seriously affected by the recent heavy rains in that section—some portions of the road being under water—however, this is now open and fast drying. From three miles below Greenfield pavement is now complete into San Francisco except for six miles of dirt road between Camphora and Gonzales—this is under construction and a muddy detour parallels the construction work. Motorists contemplating a trip over the Coast Route should get in touch with the touring bureau of the Auto Club, to determine whether or not this route is open.

INLAND ROUTE NORTH—Pavement is complete from Los Angeles to Saugus via the San Fernando boulevard; from here the best route to Bailey's Ranch and north is via the Bouquet Canyon road. Bouquet Canyon is entirely open—as well as the road from Elizabeth Lake to Bailey's Ranch, and with a few days more of sunshine will be in good condition. From Bailey's Ranch to Bakersfield pavement is complete except for a stretch of oiled road between the Kern county line and the northern foot of the Grape Vine Grade. Pavement is also complete from Bakersfield north through Delano to within one mile of Tipton; after which it is advisable to follow temporary signs erected by the Auto Club, to Visalia. Pavement is complete from Visalia to San Francisco, via Fresno, Merced, Modesto, and Oakland, with the exception of a short stretch in Altamont Pass—it is no longer necessary to make the detour from Livermore to Pleasanton and Santa Rita as the construction work is finished between Livermore and Santa Rita via the main road.

SAN DIEGO COAST AND INLAND ROUTES—Both these roads are open and in good condition.

BIG BEAR LAKE — Only route open now is via Victorville—this route is very slushy and soft in the valley; possible for cars to get through but the use of skid chains is necessary. Waterman Canyon open as far as Little Bear.

MILL CREEK CANYON ROAD—Open and in good condition up to Forest Home—where snow will be found.

SAN ANTONIO CANYON ROAD—Open and in good condition, snow will be found in Icehouse Canyon, three miles north of Camp Baldy.

The Cost.

SPEED MANIAC MUST PAY BIG TIRE BILLS.

"EXPERIMENTS just concluded at our factory in Akron show that the speeder sows other seeds besides those of a possible disaster when he 'lets her out,'" said F. R. Carroll, district manager of the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company. "He is also speeding up his tire expenditures, for fast driving is destructive to any tire.

"If the speeding mania is so strongly intrenched that the motorist cannot desist from the dangerous sport he should obey two rules if he would avoid the prodigal purchases of tires.

"Number one is to drive slowly over rough roads and take turns cautiously; number two is to increase the pressure in his tires from two to eight pounds above normal.

"Specially built tires such as are used by racing drivers are required for speeding.

"The reason for this is obvious to those acquainted with scientific matters. The faster a tire is driven the more heat it generates internally. Normal speed will not raise the temperature to a dangerous point. Excessive speed will, however, increase the heat so greatly that additional vulcanization will take place.

"This drys out not only the friction gum between the plies of fabric, but the very fabric itself, depriving the tire of considerable elasticity, resiliency and life. The excessive heat, drying out the adhesive friction gum between the plies of fabric, naturally separates them one from another. This results in the fabric chafing, weakening the carcass to a point where it can no longer maintain the air pressure. The result is a blowout.

"Some motorists drive at the same speed over a rough road as they do over a boulevard and then wonder why it is that their tires wear away so rapidly.

"Watch the speeder negotiating a rough road just about as fast as his car can travel, and notice the rear wheels as they strike an obstacle.

The shock comes so abruptly and forcibly that they are usually raised off from the ground. Perhaps only an inch or so, but during the fraction of a second when the wheels are off the ground the tension is released on the engine and the wheels are spinning much faster.

NASTY CUTS.

"Consequently, when they again strike the road the ground itself must do some brake work and this has an action on the tread of the tire like that af a rasp being rubbed over its surface. If there should happen to be a sharp-pointed stone or other obstacle in the road when the tires land from their momentary ascent the result would be a nasty cut around the tread. In the wink of an eye there may be a deep, serious injury of this nature extending a few inches or nearly half-way round the tire.

"This fact should be particularly impressed, that an average speed of twenty-five miles per hour gets most mileage out of the average tire."

Four-Speed-Forward Transmissions in Moreland Distillate Motor Trucks

Put there because the transportation needs of the western country make such equipment necessary.

Any other installation, except in the small capacity units, is a makeshift, antiquated method of using power.

Three-speed transmissions are classed along with chain drives, two-cylinder motors and the other relics of former days. Commercial vehicles carrying these misfit features are decreasing in production year-by-year and will in a short time disappear from the market, except in cheap, short-lived vehicles.

The western user of motor trucks is constantly face-to-face with abnormal conditions where proper power control must be had to combat these conditions. Moreland Distillate Motor Trucks are western products, designed so that they successfully perform under the most trying conditions.

In the desert and mountainous sections of California you will find Morelands hauling capacity loads under conditions that have forced eastern-built trucks out of the running.

In Arizona they are maintaining daily ore hauling schedules that have proven impossible for improperly designed vehicles.

In the Mexican campaign a Moreland was one of three trucks to qualify under Government test work and several hundred standard Moreland trucks are now in Government service at western posts and cantonments.

In the Bolivian Andes Mountains Morelands are hauling tin ore at altitudes ranging from 14,000 to 17,000 feet. They also carry the mail over a ninety-mile run from Amapala to Tegucigalpa, Honduras. Look at your Atlas and see what this means.

In Australia a fleet of better than twenty Morelands is performing wonders and doing so with kerosene as fuel.

And in and around Los Angeles many hundreds are working for commercial interests, establishing records on economy and consistent operation that are not equaled by any truck.

For over seven years the Moreland Distillate Motor Truck has been making a name for sturdiness; up-to-dateness of design; economy of operation and upkeep and extreme value for its selling price.

No better material goes into any truck and many of the features that have made the Moreland name what it is are confined exclusively to Moreland products.

It's to your best interests to know this western vehicle first-hand.

DEPARTMENT STORE MAKES A SPECIALTY OF AUTO ACCESSORIES.

Owners of flivvers will have a magnificent opportunity to outfit themselves with various accessories for their cars at the lowest possible cost this week, when the automobile accessory department of the Broadway Department Store indulges in a sale of oils, tires and other articles necessary to the enjoyment of motoring.

One of the features will be the Ehman tire, a tire new in name, but old in service. This tire has been made for a number of years, but sold under the firm name of the retailer. Marshall Feld & Sons of Chicago, for instance, have been marketing the Marshall Field tire, which is in reality the Ehman.

This week a tire, red tube, tire cover and tube bag will be sold for the ordinary cost of the non-skid tire alone, and in addition there will be ten-gallon lots of Pennant Motor Oil at a reduced rate, and a number of necessary accessories at similarly lowered prices. The tires carry an ironclad guarantee.

Thief Catcher.

ery of the car or in the capture of the thieves, says the club detective.

Here is what the expert advises every motorist to do in this regard:

Be able at a moment's notice to give a good description of your car, and to do this, familiarize yourself with the following: License and motor number; in fact, all numbers that appear on different units of the machine; be able to give a good description of the top—whether carried up or down; description of tires, including make, size, tread and serial numbers; work you have done on the car; dents or scratches on the car and extra equipment with manufacturers' numbers on same.

A special blank for this purpose is now issued by the Automobile Club, and may be obtained by all motorists at the headquarters, where it will be filed by the theft bureau and thus prove immediately available in case of theft.

According to the champion auto thief catcher, the type of thief known as the "joy-rider" will buy gas, but seldom buys oil, consequently the majority of cars stolen by him for joy jaunts are found somewhere in the wilds with the engine thoroughly and completely burned out.

Therefore, it is better to keep the car always well stocked with oil, and then if it is stolen, when it is recovered it will be in better condition than if there was no oil in it. Probably the theft bureau can recover it before the oil supply is exhausted.

ANOTHER TRICK.

Another trick to be remembered is not to leave valuables of any kind in the side pockets of the machine. This includes kodaks and guns particularly. They are most always stolen. The revolver may be used by the thieves to plug some of the police, or it may be used against the owner himself if he is nervy enough to try to snatch his car out of the clutches of the thieves. As for leaving lap robes or overcoats in the machines—that is fatal, they are surely stolen these days.

Thieves are afraid of owners who do their own Sherlock work, so every motorist should be his own detective, says the Automobile Club sleuth. When you park your car and get out and start to go in an office building, or wherever it is you are going, turn around and look back to see if the busy little thieves are getting away with it, for they steal 'em before the motor gets cold.

That the authorities are handicapped by the apparent indifference of many motorists in providing the necessary dope to aid in the recovery of their cars is one of the points emphasized by Powell in his confession. Also, by a number of car owners who lock their machines and then go away leaving the key in the lock.

Long-distance stealing has reached a point now where it has become an art with a large A. It is believed that there is a gang of "Arizona raiders" now at work in Los Angeles, whose special pleasure it is to steal cars here to be sold in Arizona after the machines have been remodeled. Two of the alleged ringleaders have been captured through the efforts of the Automobile Club and the Long Beach police department, and some interesting developments are looked for.

HEAD OF AUTO CLUB BUYS ANOTHER CAR.

Re-electing Fred L. Baker as president of the Automobile Club of Southern California has become almost an automatic function with the thousands of members of that remarkable organization. Under the long-continued presidency of Mr. Baker the Southern California club has grown to be the largest organization of its sort in the world, and its efficient service has won it nation-wide reputation among motorists.

Naturally enough, Mr. Baker is an extremely ardent motorist, and has been ever since the days when motor cars were horseless carriages, and has developed a discriminating taste in motor cars that Manager E. E. Caiseer of the Al G. Faulkner Company was able to satisfy last week with a nifty four-passenger Marmon roadster.

PERFECT STAR IN COLDEST WEATHER.

CAR AT CURB ALL NIGHT DURING A BLIZZARD STANDS HARD TEST.

Unlike many innovations introduced at automobile show time, this great Chalmers feature of gasoline saving and cold weather starting bears the mark of success already accomplished in all sections of the country.

In addition to thousands of private owners, it has also figured conspicuously in several events of national importance. The first public appearance was at Sheepshead Bay, when Joe Dawson, celebrated race driver, shattered all public records for the twenty-four-hour nonstop endurance run. The Chalmers company, having suspended all speed events for the duration of the war, the latest public achievement of the hot spot was in a remarkable test held at Chicago.

A stock Chalmers was left standing at the curb for fifteen hours, at the height of one of the worst storms and blizzards experienced in many years.

The average temperature for the fifteen hours was 18 deg. above zero, and on the following morning, in the presence of newspaper men, the first explosion was registered in 4 seconds and a perfect start in 17 seconds.

MOTOR TRUCK IS BOON TO FAMLIES.

MOVING DAYS MADE MUCH EASIER BY THE BIG "GAS" VANS.

The development of the transfer business to include the transport of household furnishings from one town or city to another within a moderate distance is attributable direct to the motor truck. It is believed that as much actual tonnage in household goods, to be conveyed over a distance under 100 miles, is handled in Los Angeles and vicinity by motor truck as by all the railroads combined.

In the past it was a common experience for the householder, when compelled by circumstances to remove from one place of residence to another, to reach the destination in advance of the furniture. Delays that ensued were vexatious, but no amount of reasoning or complaint could improve matters. The railroads controlled every phase of the question. But nowadays the truck is backed to the curb in front of the house being vacated and the next stop is at a similar place many miles away. Not only has the intercity transportation problem been met by the trucks, but in addition, there has not been necessary rehauling between houses and depots.

RAIN MAKES SALES FOR ENCLOSED CAR.

The best salesman I have had or could have was the rain of the past week, says W. D. Dunham, the local Ford agent, for it set people to thinking and inquiring about the sedan or enclosed type of car.

The Ford sedan, like the inclosed models of other cars has been gradually coming into greater popularity, but it really takes a heavy rain like last week's downpour for the people to realize the advantages offered by them.

Cold Weather on West Front Brings Investigation of Air Cooling.

Over There.

AIR-COOLED CAR PRAISED.

Performs Wonderfully on Western Front.

Tribute from Canadians to Yankee Auto.

South Africa also Sends in Testimonial.

Letters of indorsement of the efficiency of the air-cooled Franklin car from points more widely separated than the north pole and the equator have been received recently by the Franklin Automobile Company, and copies forwarded to Ralph Hamlin, the local representative of the car. One of these came from the battlefield of France and Hamlin pronounces it the best testimonial in Franklin history, while at the same time pointing to American trade possibilities in Europe following the war.

The letter follows:

"FRANCE, Jan. 7, 1918.

"To Franklin Motor Car Company,
Syracuse, N.Y.
"From
Officer Commanding
Vosges and Jura Groups,
Canadians, France.
"Dear Sirs:—

"Will you kindly send me a couple of your catalogues? This zero weather is supplying us with a steady supply of frozen water-jackets and both our own and the French transport officers have arrived at a keen appreciation of the many good qualities of the air-cooled car.

"I have owned two Franklin cars and expect to buy another one if I last to finish this job. I have tried to get the War Office to supply us with two Franklins for our work in France and very nearly succeeded. The French appear keenly interested in that machine of yours and from what I have told them and from the advertisements that have appeared occasionally in Life. I believe that if a Franklin demonstrator were attached to one of the armies you could sell all of the cars that you could make.

"In any case, send me a couple of catalogues.

"Yours truly,
"LIEUT.-COL. G. H. JOHNSON."

Another letter received by the Franklin company came from the owner of a Franklin car at Johannesburg, South Africa. He recited how his car was the wonder and admiration of all who saw the uses to which he put it, because it cooled so efficiently when the sun was so hot it was impossible for other cars to operate, owing to inability to keep a supply of water in the radiators. Water in the country where he used his car was scarce and cattle served as superior means of transportation to the motor car, for the reason they consumed less water, the only exception being the Franklin.

SOUTHWEST MOTORS

Starting off from a new home.

Here is one of the 1918 Maxwells standing in front of the Southwest Motors salesrooms, from which place they will be delivered henceforth.

REPORTS BUSINESS GOOD IN NORTH.

E. Bruce Conlee, manager of the Cleveland Standard Tire and Rubber Company, has just returned from a trip to Ventura, Santa Barbara and towns in the Santa Clara Valley with the statement that business is good and that his products were going good. He found that the reputation of the Cleveland standard tires was very high and had no trouble in opening up some accounts in the valley cities.

AIRPLANE EXPERT IS TIRE COMPANY HEAD.

Mr. Raymund V. Morris was appointed general manager of the Savage Tire Company and the Savage Tire Corporation at the annual meeting of the directors of these companies, which was held recently in San Diego. As the title assigned to Mr. Morris indicates, he is to have complete charge of all of the activities of the Savage companies.

Mr. Morris is nationally known through his former connection with the Curtiss Airplane Company. He possesses in a marked degree the ability and energy necessary for the successful performance of the high dutres of his new office.

EFFICIENCY BATE WINTERING HERE.

John W. Bate, considered one of the greatest automobile designers of the day and until recently connected with the Mitchell factory in Wisconsin, is in Southern California. He has been sojourning at Arrowhead Hot Springs for a few days and intends to remain in the Southland for quite some time, resting. He has not stated his plans for the future, but declares he is here principally to rest from strenuous activities in the automobile field. He expects to devote a great deal of his time while here to motoring.

The New Order.

NEW AGENCY IS HARD HIT.

Scores Want Chance to Sell Its Cars.

Manager and Force are Working Overtime.

Southern California Takes to Their Line.

"These are the days of swift action and sudden changes in the established order of things all over the world," says Frank M. Headlee, manager of Southwest Motors, newly-appointed Southern California distributers of the output of the great Maxwell factories, located in half a dozen cities in the East.

"With many of the great factories diverting 40 to 60 per cent. of their factory facilities to the manufacture of war munitions, farm tractors for the Allies, airplane motors and parts and army transport trucks, it is easy to see a reason for the general feeling that in ninety days from date there may be considerable difficulty in securing immediate delivery of the small light passenger car, as well as the light truck.

"The vividness with which the American general public is coming to realize that we are engaged in a world war to rescue civilization itself from the fell clutches of his satanic majesty of Potsdam, is reflected in the unmistakable drift of automobile buying toward the small light car with plenty of power.

DOING BUSINESS.

"We are doing business from day to day with a class of buyers who, a year ago, although they had nothing but admiration and good will for the grit and go of the plucky little Maxwell, could not see it with a spy glass for their own use, simply because they must have a car twice as big. Many a man today is figuring on a car one-half the weight and one-half the cost of the car he had expected to buy, and 'the answer' is Liberty Bonds, thrift stamps or a son in France.

"It is felt that civilization must go on, and work must go on. Travel is a part of everyday life, and the automobile, like the telephone, the telegraph and the typewriter, must continue its function in the evolution of this twentieth century civilization of unfoldment and progress and uplift for all mankind which we are struggling to perpetuate on the face of this planet in spite of the maniacs of the submarine.

GENERAL ORDER.

"However, the general order for the judicious appropriation of all resources in America has put a stiff wind into the sails of the factories building the Maxwell passenger cars and Maxwell trucks, to the extent that expansion of distribution facilities in many cities has become imperative within the past six months."

Maxwell dealers in every hamlet in California south of Tehachepi, as well as the two counties of Clark and Lincoln, in Western Nevada, have been flocking to the general offices of Southwest Motors, Nos. 607-609 West Seventh street, for the past seven days, all eager and keenly anxious to close contracts for territory, and deliveries of the new Maxwell lines from month to month as rapidly as transportation facilities will permit.

UNIVERSITY COURSE FOR GARAGE MEN.

A class in the manufacture, care and repair of starting, lighting and ignition systems of motor vehicles has been established by the university extension division of the University of Wisconsin, at its branch in Milwaukee, for both employers and employes of garages and service stations. Later the course will be presented in other Wisconsin cities.

New Model.

IMPROVEMENT IN ENGINE IS DUE TO WAR STRESS.

THAT the effect of the improvement in engine design due to the stress of war-time requirements is distinctly evident in the new Paige model, the Essex, is the assertion of A. M. Young, manager for Smith Bros., Paige distributors. The newest Paige has attracted much attention since its arrival at the local agency, and the motor shows a number of detail improvements, which Manager Young declares are the direct result of the lessons taught by war-time demands upon the internal combustion motor.

"An automatic, self-cleaning valve device that is a feature of the new Paige is a good example of what I mean," said Manager Young last week. "Everyone knows what a loss of power results from valves that are clogged with carbon or pitted. The new Paige invention does away with this by an automatic adjustable spacer that takes advantage of the tendency of the valve spring to wind up each time the valve is lifted and the valve spring compressed. This turns the valve slightly at each stroke, so that each time the valve makes contact on the valve seat at a new point. This actually cleans and polishes the valve and its seat and keeps the valve action constantly at the highest point of efficiency.

"Another important improvement that was directly borrowed from airplane practice was a change in the intake manifold design that gives each of the six cylinders exactly the same volume of gas at the same temperature and speed

"As far as the body lines of the newest Paige are concerned, we consider them incontrovertible evidence to back up the famous Paige slogan of the "the most beautiful car in America." Certainly, they suggest a custom-made job all the way through. The new lines achieved in the design of the rear end are especially pleasing, and add to the comfort of the rear seat as well."

Economy.

"OLD HOSS" TAKES COUNT AGAIN, FIGURES PROVE.

BY comparison of the motor car to the horse method of transportation, the concrete figures will prove that utility and economy are the two biggest advantages of the automobile. A number of merchants with transportation problems, one of the chief factors of their business, have kept accurate data on the comparative cost of the horse and motor vehicle, and in every instance that has been reported the advantage rests on the gasoline side of the ledger.

James L. Irving of the Irving Motor Car Company, distributor of Elgin and Cole automobiles in Southern California and Arizona, has received a letter from a Santa Ana merchant who replaced the horse by the motor car method. It furnishes interesting testimony of the surprising increase in economy and utility which the automobile brought to his business.

In a single year the automobile saved $511 over the horse in operation and maintenance cost, covered 2000 miles more ground, enabled a salesman to call upon 35 per cent. more customers, and to increase his sales by 40 per cent.

The second year the automobile showed even greater results, saving $560 in operation and maintenance cost, covering 2300 miles more territory and producing a 200 per cent. increase in business.

"In the year 1914 we paid for horse and buggy hire $625, driving about 5000 miles," writes the merchant. "In 1915 we purchased an automobile, drove it 7000 miles, paid $94.70 for oil and gasoline, $45 for insurance and $150 for garaging and a truck body, or a total of $289. We saved $336 over the horse and buggy and in addition $175 in drayage charges, a grand total of $511.

"We drove the same car 7300 miles in 1916, paid $124.15 for oil and gasoline, $45 for insurance, and $120.96 for garage, or a total of $290.11, a saving of $335. We also saved in that year $225 in drayage, or a grand total of $560. Our canvasser saw 35 per cent. more people and increased his sales 40 per cent. the first year and nearly 200 per cent. the second year. We do not attribute all the gain in the sales to the use of the automobile, but are quite sure 75 per cent. of the gain can be placed to its use. In 1917 we used a new automobile and have not yet compiled all our reports, but feel it certainly was responsible for a good share of our prosperity."

s of personal letters and ways, Harris M. Hanshue, of the Motor Car Dealers' and manager of the Coast territory for Apperson Automobile Company, has conducting an investigation of conditions as they relate omobile industry. The re- his labors is the conviction is well with the makers of cars whose product and methods deserve a prosper- ing that he is a seer or a veiled prophet, the representative of the "eight with eighty less parts" says he fails to find any real reason in conditions or outlook for pessimistic expressions of the kind that have been circulated for some time.

LUXURIES.

"We are either in the midst or the beginning of the most trying time the country has ever known," says Hanshue. "People are conservative and it is up to them to do a little bit more of it along the line of those things which are going to be needed by our boys at the front. Luxuries will have to be eliminated, or at least cut down, necessities will have to be conserved and all of us will have to do all possible to preserve and provide the heart and muscle to those who are fighting for us.

FIRST CONSIDERATION.

"But the government is not going to interfere with the passenger car manufacturer. It is very true that transportation facilities for war purposes first must be considered, but these very conditions are bringing home to the minds of thinking men more and more the fact that the automobile has finally and forevermore passed out of the luxury class into the class of economic necessities. There are many business firms in Los Angeles today using Apperson cars for their sales departments who cover their entire territory by motor instead of railroad. The business man has learned to use his car in his business. Because of delays in express shipments, many firms are now sending their products direct in motor cars of their own. The manufacture of cars may be cut down a little, but the talk that the government is going to 'throttle industry,' or that it even is going to interfere is being proved a fallacy every day."

LIKE ATTRACTS LIKE, AUTO MAN LEARNS.

According to M. A. Leach, who stopped at San Francisco on his way from the East, the Premier, for which the Leach Motor Car Company in Southern California and Arizona distributor, attracted no little attention. Leach says: "It was indeed interesting to see how the different types of cars attract different types of people." To a certain extent it is a case of like attracts like. The business-like car, with efficiency marked all over it, is generally the center of interested discussion of its prototype—the business man; while the same car, with a more expensive body, is singled out by the professional man or milady of means for her social duties. The Premier seven-passenger car and the Premier sedan, with their magnetic gear shift and aluminum motors, also drew more than their share of popular approval. The ability to shift gears by merely pushing a button is a novelty that will take a good while to wear off.

We challenge comparison of the Peerless car with any automobile produced in America today. We will not restrict these comparisons to price, for, after all, it is satisfactory performance under any and all conditions that really counts.

We can claim light weight, excessive tire, oil, and gasoline mileage, easy riding qualities, and flexibility produced by our Two Power Range system and prove Peerless superiority.

We extend an invitation to you to investigate and drive this wonderful car and will willingly let you be the judge as to whether the claims we make can be demonstrated.

We have for immediate delivery one four, or five-passenger Coupe at $3090—

a—An old move, but not so much played as Kt-B3. I consider it fully as good as the latter move.

b—B-KKt5 is the usual move here.

c—To avoid KtxP followed if knight takes by P-Q4.

d—His next move is bad, so this move, preparing for it, was not good.

e—Taking a fine advantage of the position. The game is a good illustration of the embarrassment into which White is often plunged trying to maintain his center pawns.

f—Black exacts the fullest gain obtainable from the position. Now the bishop at Q4 cannot move on account of Kt-B5 mate. The reply to QxR would also be Kt-B5 ch.

NEW PLANT TO BE BUILT IN CANADA.

Wide-awake to the business conditions that are reported to be constantly improving in Canada in spite of the war, Robert H. Hassler, Inc., manufacturer of shock absorbers, will erect a factory immediately at Hamilton, Ont., according to information just received by the California Sales Company, distributor of Hasslers.

Western Canada, particularly Alberta and Saskatchewan, have been having bumper crops, and the prospects for this year are as good if not better than last year. All of which is good news to the United States, for it takes some of the burden of feeding the Allies from our hard-worked shoulders.

MADE IN L. A. BRAND STILL SPEEDING EAST.

An instance of the wonderful growth of manufacturing industries in Los Angeles is that of the Damon Specialty Company, manufacturers of Nonolio polishes for automobiles. Not satisfied with invading the Middle West and Canada with Los Angeles-made products, this company has now arranged to establish headquarters on the Atlantic Coast, in New York City, and plans toward this end have practically been perfected, according to W. H. Damon. Nonolio products are to be distributed through the Central Atlantic States and New England as well, by picked crews and the distribution will be on an extensive scale. Fred Eisner, in charge of the wholesale end of the business, is now in Chicago.

America is facing an acute shortage of this necessary commodity.

Already prices have advanced to abnormal levels.

This is due in large measure to the maintained consumption in face of the decreasing supply.

Usefulness of Motor Trucks is Proven by Figures of Los Angeles Firm on Local Truc

Speeding up delivery with a fleet of trucks.

Here are some views of part of the fleet of trucks used by Bishop & Company. Starting with one lone Moreland several years ago this firm has added to the fleet until it now has seven hustling around and keeping up with the orders.

Make Good.

FINDS MOTOR TRUCKS INCREASE EFFICIENCY.

HAVING successfully and completely revolutionzed the delivery system by means of using Moreland distillate burning trucks, Bishop & Co., manufacturers of candies and other dainties, has increased its numbsr of delivery trucks to seven.

More than two years ago the Moreland was given its first taste of hard labor by the Bishop confectionery factory, and because of its proven economy of operation and upkeep expense, another truck of similar make was ushered into service soon after. As time passed and the Moreland enacted its daily duties with a degree of satisfaction, the number was constantly increased, until it is now seven.

"Prompt service is one of the essentials for building up a healthy wholesale business and especially in this line," declared J. Crawford, factory superintendent of the Bishop company.

STANDARDIZE.

"Soon after we had given the Moreland the acid test it was evident that the acme of efficiency in this particular branch of business had been realized. Thus it was that we increased at every opportunity our delivery trucks, and those particularly to standardize on Moreland equipment.

"With our continually increasing business we have found that in order to meet all imperative needs our means of conveyance of goods should be given particular attention. In view of this, our seven Moreland trucks are handling our suburban business very satisfactorily, and as yet we have not had one iota of treuble with them.

"Before deciding on what truck we would choose to standardize, we thoroughly investigated the local automobile market. After careful inspection and by actual demonstrtaion, a compilation of figures showed that the Moreland was just what we wanted, owing to the nominal cost of operation.

GASIFIER.

"To me, the Moreland gasifier, which makes it possible to use distillate as fuel, is an economic point that all prospects should consider first hand. In addition to its working efficiency, it is a device of home birth—a factor not to be readily overlooked.

"We have in the course of construction our new factory, and it will be adjacent to the new and mammoth terminal building, which will cover an area of more than two blocks. Along with this we naturally anticipate an increase in production and consequently increased business. To help us take care of our growing business we will make an addition to our number of Moreland trucks.

"We have placed the Morelands on our hardest grinds. Each of the trucks averages from seventy-five to eighty-five miles per day in our suburban territory. The service rendered is absolutely without reproach, and we have been using one, one and a half and two and a half-ton trucks," concluded Mr. Crawford.

NEW HONORS FOR POPULAR AUTO MAN.

RECEIVES ONE OF HIGHEST POSITIONS IN THE TRADE ON COAST.

Having been elevated to one of the highest positions on the Pacific Coast in the service of the White company, R. S. Hurd has joined the organization of the White Automobile Company, until recently known as the Pioneer Commercial Auto Company, distributor in Southern California of White automobiles and trucks, in the capacity of sales manager.

"The White Automobile Company, of which O. R. Fuller is the head, has a reputation with the White organization, and particularly on the Pacific Coast, as being very efficient and equally aggressive. We have both been trained in White principles and I am glad that we have joined in a common cause. Southern California offers a great field for high-grade trucks such as the White and, although the change, before it was effected, was thoroughly considered by me, I feel more and more that I have made no mistake in coming to your beautiful and wonderfully prosperous Southland," said the new sales head.

Work on the new depot on South Los Angeles street of the White bus line is nearing completion and within a few days the terminal will be ready for occupancy.

ANCIENT CANYON LURES MOTORISTS.

NEW HIGHWAY WILL MAKE SCENIC TRIP MORE ACCESSIBLE.

The action of Riverside county in appropriating funds to build a road into Andreas Canyon will make accessible to motorists one of the most beautiful spots in all Southern California. Located near Palm Springs and within even shorter distance of Palm Canyon, this crevice, not more than one-half mile long and one-quarter mile wide, has been but seldom visited.

A "blind canyon," Andreas can only be located from even a short distance by a clump of trees that marks its rocky entrance. A small concrete dam has been erected at its mouth to hold water that flows from a spring and which is used in a very small way for irrigation. Old rock formations, evidently the result of some seismic upheaval, and dense tropical jungle growths, will offer a lure that will draw many a motorists.

Rocks near the entrance are pitted with holes that were once used, it is said, by Indians in the grinding of corn. Overhanging rocks also furnished, according to those who claim to be conversant with the history of that section, housing for some of the Indians that made that region their habitat.

Some of the first pictures ever made of Andreas Canyon were secured by Lynn C. Buxton, distributor of the Stearns-Knight. This make of car was pushed farther into Andreas it is believed, than any other.

MOTOR TRAINING SCHOOLS INCREASE.

Mechanical training schools, high schools in which popular mechanics is part of the curriculum, and schools of instruction which are fast becoming an important part of the Y.M.C.A. system, are giving more attention than ever to automobile engineering, according to E. M. Chandler, sales manager for the Master Carburetor Company.

"There is hardly a day that we do not receive one or more letters from such institutions asking for cut-in-two samples of the Master with accompanying literature," said Chandler. "It is very evident that the system of carburetion as employed in this carburetor, and which, through many jets, breaks up the fuel, is attracting the attention of instructors. We intend to assist in the edification of the new idea to the best of our ability."

RAIN WELCOME IN SPITE OF HARDSHIP.

"Although the heavy rains by reason of washed-out roads have placed many an automobile spring on the blink, those who have experienced the incident make light of it when it comes to paying the repair bills. They all seem to be so happy over the long-deferred rain and the breaking of the drouth that a little matter of a bursted spring doesn't count," said J. B. Rauen, secretary and treasurer of the United States Spring Company. "Although shipments from points east of Pittsburgh and bound this way will in all probability be tied up to a marked degree for some time, we are advised by our eastern connections that freight conditions west of there and particularly from Middle West points, should begin to improve at once."

WINTER SALES TO TOURISTS HEAVY.

PERFECT WEATHER WITHOUT RAIN PLEASES THE EASTERNER.

"Though every Californian was more or less worried over the long drouth that preceded our recent rains, there can be no doubt that the tourists at least were well satisfied with our dry weather," declared J. E. Brown, manager of the Los Angeles branch of Don Lee, last week.

"Our winter sales to tourists were heavier, I think, this winter than ever before, and I believe that the dry weather that prevailed during December and January was responsible for it. We sold a number of cars to tourists who told us that they did not have the slightest intention of purchasing cars when they came out, but that the combination of week after week of perfect weather—perfect at least from the tourists' standpoint—and the temptation offered by Southern California roads, proved too strong to resist.

"Shipments of eastern owned cars have been heavy dirung the past few weeks too. We have received more than thirty Cadillacs from various eastern points whose owners are out here for the winter and brought their cars along.

PLAN MISSISSIPPI POWER-BOAT RACES.

Races under the auspices of the Mississippi Valley Power Boat Association are to be staged during the summer months. The organization embraces a majority of the leading clubs in the Middle West, and has a call upon some of the best and speediest boats which use the inland waters.

Make Auto History.

EIGHTY-SEVEN CARS IN DRIVE-AWAY TO DI

WHAT is said to have been the most remarkable drive-away in the history of motor cars was recently concluded at Atlanta, Ga., when eighty-seven Oakland cars arrived there after having been driven 1025 miles from the factory at Pontiac, Mich., over good, bad and awful roads. The Dixie highway was followed and the drivers demonstrated their fitness to serve as army chauffeurs should Uncle Sam need their services in driving trucks or ambulances beyond the Atlantic.

H. C. McVey, the Los Angeles dealer in Oakland cars, recently received a report of the motor migration, which is declared to have been unique, inasmuch as every one of the cars was in the hands of an owner. The drivers had purchased cars from the Atlanta distributor, and were told that it would be impossible to get them because of the embargo against automobile shipments by the railroads. They sacrificed ten days of their time in goi[n]g to Pontiac by railroad and return in the car of their choice, a previously unheard of event.

The Oakland purchasers were of the kind that "want what they want when they want it," and having determined to own one of these cars, they would not be gainsaid because of conditions. The eighty-seven cars in the Oakland "motorcade" made the trip without a mishap and checked in at Atlanta with clean mechanical scores despite the fact that the road conditions were below the average, with deep snows on the northern end and heavy rains on the southern. Detours, made imperative by road construction work, were the rule on the tour, but the "Sensible Sixes" plowed through the

Tested Warriors of the Road

GOODRICH
TESTED TIRES

A YEAR'S testing, widespread as the American continent, has hammered Goodrich Tires through 4,178,744 tire miles, and proved them tested warriors of the road.

SILVERTOWN CORDS and BLACK SAFETY TREADS, they triumphed with an endurance that roused the enthusiasm of the tire experts detailed by Goodrich with the Test Car Fleets.

THE Goodrich Test Car Fleets in the South, on the Atlantic Seaboard, along the Great Lakes, on the Great Plains, amidst the Rocky Mountains and Pacific Coast deserts and highlands, have put the wear-and-tear test of rock, sand, gravel, mud and frozen slush to Goodrich Tires, and the tires have won with phenomenal mileage.

THE spiral-wrapped, cable-cord tire body, the cross-barred, close clutch, non-skid tread, the special quality of Goodrich Tires proved beyond a hint of doubt that Goodrich construction and Goodrich rubber making have brought the automobile tire to the peak of service. They give sure service because it is proven service.

LOCAL DEALER SATISFIED WITH CONDITIONS IN EAST.

Finds Plenty of Optimism and Good Business Despite Bad Weather.

SOME twenty pounds lighter, M. A. Leach of the Leach Motor Car Company swung off the Los Angeles Limited, glad to get back to California. When a man spends three weeks of a business trip confined to his bed, with his temperature at 105, and his pulse 120, it is no wonder that the East holds no charms for him.

"The prime purpose of my eastern trip," said Leach, when seen at his office this week, "was to definitely ascertain the status quo of the motor car industry as pertaining to its relations with dealers on the Pacific Coast.

"In my visits to the factories of the various cars we handle, namely: the Dort, in Flint; the Liberty and King, in Detroit, and the Premier in Indianapolis, I discussed the situation not only with the executives, but with the men in the shops and the great spirit of loyalty and patriotism expressed on all sides was a pleasant revelation to me. Workmen are giving the best there is in them to assist the manufacturers in maintaining their schedule, and the manufacturer in turn is offering the workmen every inducement possible.

MONSTER CONTRACT.

"The Premier Motor Car Co. is working on a $14,000,000 contract for motors for the government and the King Motor Car Co. on ambulances and chassis for armored motor car bodies for the government.

"Everywhere in the East there is optimism, but far sighted business men are not for one minute allowing this patriotic optimism to lead them into pitfalls. Everywhere there is a feeling of substantial business, founded upon conservative lines. No big business man or manufacturer is camouflaging his opinion by saying that business is as good as usual. Everywhere, there is rational but certain retrenchment. Business though is, in fact, much better than one could ordinarily expect under present conditions.

"The unprecedented cold weather has been a serious drawback throughout the East. The heatless days and the workless factories have naturally caused a slowing up of production in all lines, but that is only a temporary condition, and already manufacturers are seeing their way out of this difficulty because of the gradually increasing warmth of the weather.

"At this time all motor car manufacturers are planning on approximately a 40 per cent. reduction in the production of cars for dealers. This is necessitated by the large contracts for government war trucks and airplane motors that are being divided up amongst those manufacturers whose equipment enables them to produce these articles.

THE CONDITIONS.

"Pacific Coast dealers are not being annoyed through the lack of deliveries. However, these conditions unfortunately cannot be maintained because as soon as the government lifts the embargo on the forwarding of shipments to the Atlantic Coast, then manufacturers will be forced to divert a large portion of their production to the eastern dealers at the expense of western dealers, because those concerns on the Atlantic seaboard, with large organizations and buildings to support, must be taken care of. This is an age of democracy and manufacturers are making every effort to show no partiality to any section of the country whatever. An even distribution of production is the aim of all concerned.

"Because of these facts I would advise every person who plans to buy a motor car to act quickly because the time is not very far off when he will be unable to secure a car. In addition to this the purchase of an automobile today is a good investment. Each day some manufacturer or other announces an increase in price, and when Ford raises the price of his product $90, motor car buyers should take heed, as this expresses the approximate percentage of increase that will necessarily follow in the price of most motor cars."

TIRE MAN AWAITS UNCLE SAM'S CALL.

The number of aviators and airplanes that the United States is able to put on the western front in Europe will be a large factor in deciding the outcome of this summer's offensive. That the government is training aviators on a large scale we know, but how many is a military secret. The only way we can realize the scope of their preparedness is by the number of our personal and business acquaintances who are constantly leaving to go in training.

L. G. Gillelen, now with Nelson & Price, agents for several well-known makes of tires, has enlisted in the aviation corps of the United States Army. He is expecting to be called at any time. Although he is still on the job he has settled up his affairs and is waiting for the final word from the government before leaving.

"TROUBLE LINKS" AN INSTANT HIT.

MOTORIST MAY REPAIR HIS BROKEN CHAINS BY SINGLE HAMMER STROKE.

"Something new and helpful" is the slogan used for an article which has just been introduced by the B. F. Wade Tire and Rubber Company, local distributor for the all-red Tyrian tire, and, having to do with the skid problems, it is of considerable interest just now because of the recent rains.

This product, known as "trouble links," consists of individual chain links enabling the motorist to repair his own chains by a single stroke of the hammer, and has been found most convenient by so many who, upon digging up their chains, found them broken in one or more places.

These trouble links, as Mr. Wade calls the extra individual chain links, were introduced as a service adjunct for his own customers, but because of the urgent demand from motorists generally he has had a sufficient number made to enable him to supply all who desire them.

EXHIBIT AT ORANGE SHOW GETS RESULTS.

TIRE AGENT IS ENTHUSIASTIC OVER HIS WORK AT SAN BERNARDINO.

You can never tell how well your product is known or how many people are using it until you talk to several thousand people, says Bob Brunner, manager of the Braender sales department, who just returned after spending several days at the Orange Show at San Bernardino, where the Braender "bulldog" tire was on display in a handsomely-decorated booth.

The souvenirs the company handed out are in a good many homes, and Bob says it won't be long before the tire is on a good many cars, as the people were much interested in this tire, and several were sold at the booth.

The double breaker strip, the extra heavy cushion, the rubberizing on the inside, the tough white tread, the strong side wall interested them, and the story of the record made at Santa Monica by Ralph de Palma, the cross-country run from New York to Los Angeles, over the Lincoln Highway, and return, on the same set of tires without a tire change, by Raoul F. LeMat, also seemed wonderful to the visitors.

TIRES VICTIMS OF SENSELESS ABUSE.

When some high automobile tire authority made the statement that more than half the tubes returned for adjustment are nothing more or less than victims of abuse, and not at all defective, he had good substantial reasons for making such an assertion, according to M. M. Robertson of the C. Fred Thompson Tire Company, California and Arizona distributors for Mason tires and tubes.

If such a statement is true and a glance at conditions would seem to indicate that it is, then it would seem as though the tire user in general might with profit to himself and to the tire companies as well, be enlightened as to the proper care of the inner tube.

STICKS TO COMPANY THAT BEARS HIS NAME.

In refutation of extensive rumors that M. A. Leach, the successful manager of the Leach Motor Car Company, would upon his return from the East sever his connection with the concern that bears his name and join forces with another local concern, Leach says: "I started out a little over a year ago to make the Leach Motor Car Company one of the factors in the motor-car business of the Southwest, and I would not think for one minute of laying down my oars and giving up all that I have accomplished. I have devoted all my time and energy in the upbuilding of this concern and while I have been approached from various sources to make a change I consider it a duty to myself and to my associates to remain where I am. So long as the Leach Motor Car Company needs my services I will be with that concern."

THE ANCIENT GAME.

According to Charles Evans, national amateur and open golf champion, golf has just entered its five hundred and sixty-first year.

Encouraging.

LOS ANGELES-MADE LENS WINS APPROVAL IN EAST.

THAT old expression: "If you make something better than the other fellow, no matter how far away you are, the public will beat a path to your door," is being exemplified in the case of the Torrance Glass Company, manufacturers of the Glareless auto lens for auto headlights.

Inquiries from several of the large eastern automobile manufacturers were received last week, according to J. W. White, the manager of the Glareless lens, looking forward to putting them on their cars as a part of their regular equipment.

"These inquiries we consider a distinct compliment to the superior driving light furnished by the Glareless auto lens, rather than its feature of doing away with glare, for only a few States have any 'glare' law and the manufacturers' interest has been aroused by the greater light efficiency offered.

"Local business has been increasing rapidly," says Mr. White, "showing, for one thing, that motorists are striving to keep within the law, and our free testing station has been working to capacity nearly every night.

"When the large eastern manufacturers turn to a Los Angeles made product as a possible equipment for their cars, it not alone speaks a good word for the product, but also is a big boost for Los Angeles as a coming industrial center."

Barney Oldfield Decides American Drivers Are Heroes of the Year.

A Great Year.

AMERICAN DRIVERS ON TOP FOR 1917 SEASON.

Wonderful New Speedway and Dirt-Track Marks Set by Speed Kings.

BY BARNEY OLDFIELD.

NINETEEN HUNDRED SEVENTEEN was a wonderful year when it came to record-breaking. Any number of American records were broken, in addition to which numerous world's marks were shattered. In fact, 1917 surpassed any recent year in the show of speed. And the best of all, American drivers absolutely monopolized the limelight.

Among those in the forefront of these record-breakers are Bill Rader, Louis Chevrolet, Ralph de Palma and Joe Dawson. The marks broken ranged from one mile to twenty-four hours and were accomplished on the speedways and mile dirt tracks.

Probably the most sensational of all the records smashed were those of Bill Rader, who was practically unknown in the automobile racing world, though a driver possessing the nerve and daring which has characterized the career of American pilots. Rader turned the Sheepshead Bay speedway course at the rate of 130.4 miles per hour for one-fourth of a mile. He made a mile at the rate of 125.1 miles per hour. These two marks are the fastest ever turned in the world except on a straightaway, even bettering the records made over the famous Brooklands cement course in England. A table of the Rader records follow:

¼ mile	6.9 s.	130.4 m.p.h.
½ mile	13.95s.	129.0 m.p.h.
1 mile	28.76s.	125.1 m.p.h.
10 miles ...	4:50.88s.	123.7 m.p.h.

In breaking these short distance world's records, Rader used a 265-horse-power aviation engine in a Packard chassis. This engine was built at the Packard plant along the same lines as that used in the country-wide campaign by Ralph de Palma the past two years. The De Palma engine was less than 300 cubic inches while the Rader motor had a piston displacement of around 900 cubic inches. It is from this engine, in part, that the famous Liberty motor was made for the United States government.

The Rader records were made July 27 and 28, and were followed on the same track by a new set of world's records made by Joe Dawson in a Chalmers. Dawson drove 1898 miles in twenty-four hours, being assisted by Joe Gardham, one of the old-time drivers, who participated in some twenty-four-hour races several years ago. Dawson drove nineteen of the twenty-four hours, making eighty-three miles in one hour and doing 100 miles in seventy minutes. The date of these marks is August 4 and 5.

On August 11 at St. Louis, over the Maxwellton mile dirt track, I had the satisfaction of breaking all the world's records from one to fifty miles, for a one-mile dirt course. I made a mile in forty-five seconds flat, which is at eighty miles per hour. The old record was about two seconds slower and made by Louis Disbrow. I made five miles in 3.53, twenty miles in 15.52 and the fifty miles in 40.47. All were beyond anything ever done on a mile track in the past.

I used my Golden Submarine for this stunt and two days later beat Ralph de Palma two out of three heats over the same course.

Louis Chevrolet broke several records during the season, but his best mark came at Sheepshead Bay, September 22, when he beat his own record for cars in the 231-300 cubic-inch class, by driving 190 miles in 54.20, which is at the rate of 110.4 miles per hour. Chevrolet used his own specially built Frontenac car, with which he won the speedway championship of 1917. Louis showed some wonderful speed during the year and led the way home in front of me twice on the speedways. I got my revenge, however, when we met on the dirt tracks, for I managed to defeat him in gruelling contests on the Pacific Coast.

Ralph de Palma started out by breaking the world's dirt track record in Detroit for twenty-five miles on the occasion of his first victory against me. He did the distance in 21m. 2⅗s. My time at St. Louis for this same distance was 19.57. On September 3 in Chicago on the speedway, De Palma broke the world's record for twenty miles by doing the distance in 11.02. He did fifty miles the same day in 28.09, both being faster than Dario Resta's time. On November 2 De Palma drove at Sheepshead Bay against the Brooklands record and did ten miles at the rate of 114 miles per hour. On November 10 he drove 109 miles in one hour, beating the Brooklands record by two miles. On November 16 he went after the world's six-hour record and beat it by fifty miles, doing 616 miles in the quarter turn of the clock. The Brooklands record was 566 miles.

In my match race on July 21 against Ralph de Palma at Providence I drove ten miles for a new track record in 8.14 1-5, which beat De Palma's former time of 9.02 1-5. This race proved one of the hardest of my life and I beat Ralph by a few inches. We met in several matches during the season and in each instance the winner was forced to break track records in order to bring home the bacon. In the count I managed to get home four times out of six in advance of De Palma.

Any number of other records of minor consequence were broken by various drivers during the year, most of which were cross-country marks from one city to another. In this particular work Ray McNamara, Clarence Shocklet, Joe Dawson and Fred Junk did the major portion of the work. Each broke two or more cross-country marks, but inasmuch as these are not recognized by the American Automobile Association, no records will be filed by the governing body of the racing sport.

Altogether 1917 was a wonderful year for speed, and many of these records will stand for years to come.

The above refers to the pilots affiliated with the A.A.A. The International Motor Contest Association, which controls dirt track racing in connection with the State fairs and expositions, named Fred Horey as champion for 1917 for its circuit. Horey is also Canadian champion.

Barney Oldfield: Have just completed an aluminum manifold where the intake is on the inside of the exhaust, entirely surrounded by the exhaust gases. Will this be all right, or will it be too hot and explode the gas before it goes into the cylinders, or will the exhaust gases melt the aluminum. Have been afraid to try it. Please advise. Charles B., Milwaukee, Wis.

I presume the manifold is of aluminum alloy, and not of aluminum. The exhaust gas will not melt it. It will not explode the gas, but it will heat the mixture so much that it will cause a reduction in power. You can use kerosene or a mixture of gas and kerosene with such a manifold and probably get better results than with gasoline. The trouble is, of course, in controlling the heat transfer to the mixture.

Barney Oldfield: I have a novelty which I can put on a Ford car and lock the steering device so that the car cannot be moved by any chance. It is very simple and can be put on in five minutes. I defy anyone to move the car with the attachment, which can be manufactured and sold at one dollar. What do you think of it? E. F., Huntington, Ind.

A good cheap lock which will prevent the car from being driven away or towed away is very desirable, and should have a good sale. I am not familiar with your design, and so I cannot criticise anything except the idea.

Barney Oldfield: From your long experience in driving automobiles, in importance, where do you place lubrication? How often would you suggest draining out the crankcase and filling same with new oil on cars such as Buick, Packard, Hudson, etc.? O. C. S., Los Angeles.

Lubrication is unquestionably first in importance. Draining, flushing and refilling the crankcase might be compared favorably with bathing and eating by human beings. It is quite possible to extend the intervals but the effect of the extension is quite noticeable on the efficiency of the man. To keep an engine running in its very best form all the time I would drain about every 600 miles. Oil costs less than repairs and I have known owners to run their cars three years—without ever taking up a bearing—all because they cleaned and filled the crankcase at intervals of about 600 miles. Of course, 1000 miles is what is usually recommended, but 600 miles is better.

Barney Oldfield: Having read your hints to drivers with great interest, I am taking the liberty of asking advice as follows:

(1.) I have a 1917 Hup which drags. Brakes O.K. Equipment includes Atwater-Kent ignition system, the contact points of which show rapid wear. Am purchasing new points. (2.) Hear a metallic ring, not knock, in the vicinity of cylinder block while making a long grade. Ring fails to disappear with retarded spark. (3.) The pressure of the exhaust gas from muffler is noisy. Is this caused by clogged exhaust gas filter screen or muffler? (4.) Self starter "bums" at times failing to start motor. For your information would advise that I start in intermediate. Would this cause the multiple disc to "spin" affecting the self starter in any way? A. KELLOGG, Los Angeles.

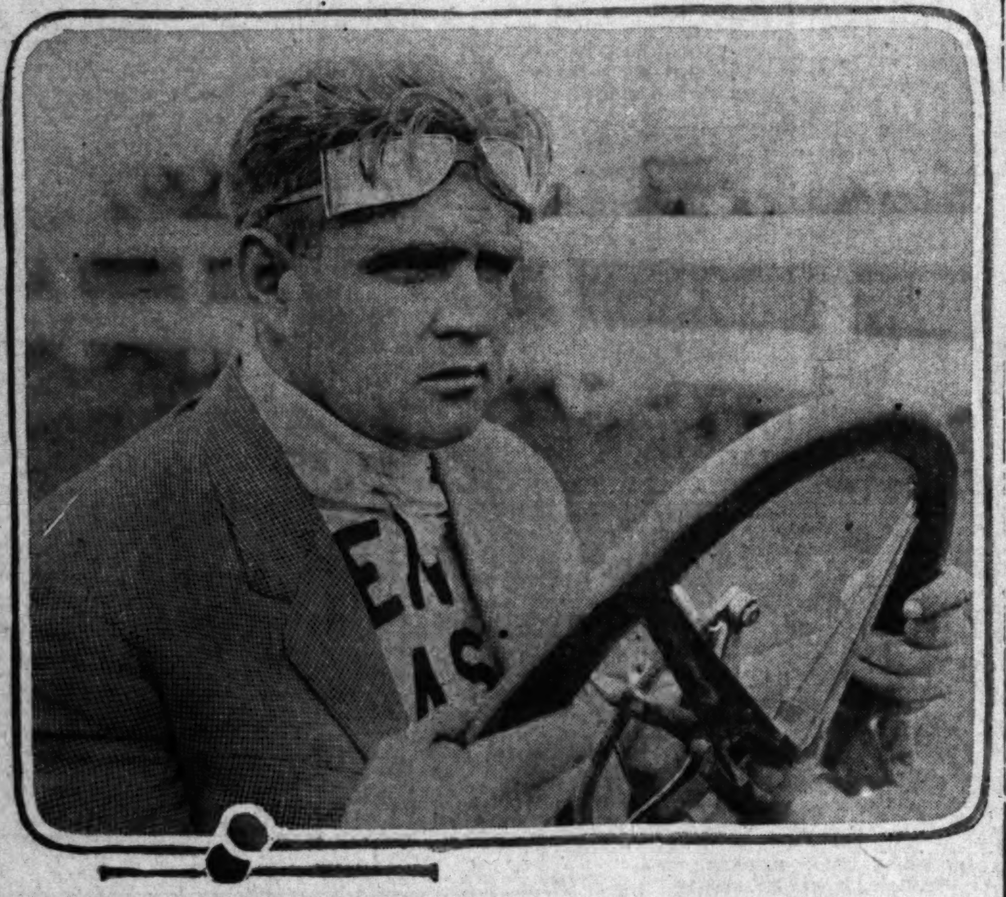
(1.) "Dragging," as you interpret it, may be caused by either excessive friction or a reduction of power. If the brakes are O.K. I would suggest first that you check up wheel alignment because poor alignment may cause a scraping action which consumes power and gives the effect of a brake drag. Oil up. This means everywhere because one or more dry bearings will make themselves known. There may be an out of alignment condition in other parts, as, for example, the front axle, one of the rear axle shafts, the clutch, etc. About the point wearing, that is expected after some running. Do you reverse the ignition switch often enough and do you trim and adjust the points three or four times a year to prevent excessive arcing? (2.) It may be a loose ring, but I would suspect that only after I had made certain that the movement of the spark lever retards the spark enough to kill a spark knock. Is the fan striking a small part? (3.) I rather think the reverse condition. A clogged condition would further retard the flow of gas. Look for a leak or broken muffler. (4.) The clutch has no connection whatever with the starting motor. The pinion spins because it is turning around and cannot mesh with the flywheel. A weak spring back of the pinion would cause it; likewise a pinion that does not slide freely on the worm.

Barney Oldfield: (1.) Can I have a magneto put on my Cadillac 8, 1917? (2.) Can I run the car with ignition system connected with dry cells when battery is removed, cranking by hand? ROLAND J. G., Dyer, Nev.

(1.) Yes. (2.) Yes. After removing battery take up generator terminals. Take your dry cell unit (4 cells in series) ground one end and connect other end with the primary wire on the ignition distributor. The only trouble with this is you will have to break the dry cell connection to stop. You can run one of the wires out and place a temporary switch in line.

Barney Oldfield: What is the idea of having an owner's name framed in his car, as per order of the California Vehicle Department this year? H. A. H., Greenfield, Cal.

So far as I know, it is merely for identification.



The blood-sweating, man-eating champion of the outlaws.

Here is Fred Horey, the greatest driver ever developed by the "beyond the pale" racing organization. He arrived in Los Angeles on Tuesday with the idea of accumulating all the speedway titles in addition to his dirt-track championships.

THE WISE SAYINGS OF SPORT O'MALLEY

BY EDWIN F. O'MALLEY.

CHARLEY (Yea Bo) Van Loan, obtruding an un-Hooverized bread basket, was one of the most thrilled at the Doyle academy last Tuesday night. He occupied seats Nos. 1 and 2 at the ringside. As Beanie Walker was absent, Van had little trouble breezing home on the chin strap as the wit of the evening. Said he was there merely to seek atmosphere for a new story, but the way he chuckled and grunted his satisfaction, his alibi suffered an awful bilge.

George Goldsmith never misses the four-rounders. Says they are the greatest that ever came over the Sierras. Always in the trenches at the ringside, he continually tips off his indwelling delight by an alphabet of faces that would put a cameraman to the despondencies.

Just after Harry Shields clipped forty winks into Cliff Thomas last Tuesday at Doyledale, the ring jingled merrily with a rain of silver. Dr. Cureall quickly broke the spell that lay so heavily on Cliff's slumbers. As Doyle was energetically chafing Thomas's cheeks the latter suddenly came out of his dazed condition and tugged himself to a standing position. Gazing with agonies of envy toward the rolling cartwheels, he purred to Jack, "Gee, pick up a few of them for me, I need them so much." Thomas didn't realize the bout was over and told his seconds he would get Shields in the coming round as soon as the ring was cleared of the silver.

Tropics for Sam Langford. The tar baby is now on his way to Panama, where the game, at present, is good for the colored contingent of American scrappers. There he will be joined by Sam McVey, Harry Wills, Jim Johnson and probably Jack Johnson. What a card it would be to have this bunch meet in a battle royal on July Fourth in Panama!

Census reports declare that the United States boasts over 100,000,000 souls. Just before going to press a rumor had it that eleven-tenths of them were pulling for Fred Fulton to lay it thick and slab on Jess Willard's jaw, should the two get together between this time and the next glorious Fourth.

Johnny Powers is a great fancier of Jack Dempsey, the sensational California heavyweight. He saw Jack in action twice, once against Meehan and the other time against Morris. Powers asserts that Dempsey improved at least 50 per cent. over his first go. He has never seen Fulton in action, but is sincere in his opinion that it will take a crackajack to lay the Californian low.

Billy Crane, dean of American comedians, cheats Father Time out of a new lease of life every time he (Billy) ringsides it. Crane never ducks a padded mitt entertainment, whether he is within short or long-range distance of it. For almost three generations he has seen the best fistiana has offered. Billy's enthusiasm advances on full stretch every time he conjures up the battle between John L. Sullivan and Paddy Ryan near New Orleans in the early 80's.

"Ah, Will (this to Will Wyatt,) you should have seen the Boston boy on that day. When he reached the ringside he jumped over the ropes without touching them. As he pulled off his bathrobe and drew himself up to his full height a murmur of delight and admiration broke from the spectators. He was the grandest specimen of humanity I had ever seen. Almost a lapse of forty years has never changed my opinion. I firmly believe that a man never breathed that could have licked Sullivan on that day."

Spider Baum bids fair to be the Eddie Plank of the Pacific Coast League. Judging from the way we saw the Spider pitch against the Angels one Sunday afternoon last season, we are fain to believe that there is a bunch of cunning still left in his sturdy right arm. We should not be surprised were he to prove the sheet anchor in the box for the Seals this year.

So the game is to lose Biff Shaller. Biff says he's through for good. Downs has been unable to charm him into a re-signing. Sluggish in nature, and apparently the laziest ball player that ever pranced in an outer garden, he has the peculiar faculty of getting there just the same, and his record shows him one of the niftiest players in the Coast League. He was a tower of strength to Hen Berry last year. The Seals without Biff and Fitz—well, not in the first division.

We opine that no one will scrape around shortstop for the Cubs but Master Hollocher. The only thing Bancroft has on him is the stick. Hol should be a revelation to the Chicago fans. His peg to first is joy to look upon. It has Joe Berger's trueness and Bobby Davis's speed. The inimitable secret of it, however, can best be described by a contradiction in terms, viz., the ball leaves his hand almost before he scoops it. He may fall down, but never in the fielding and winging line.

Battle Royal.

DIAMOND RIVALS PLAY PEPPERY GAME TODAY.

THE third game of the three-game series being played between the San Pedro Merchants and the Vernon Athletics, is scheduled for this afternoon, and will be played on the Maier Park diamond. The first contest of the series was annexed by the Shipbuilders' aggregation in which Curley Brown had the better of a pitchers' duel with Pete Schneider, San Pedro winning by a 2 to 0 score. The second game resulted in a 1 to 1, eleven-inning tie which will be played off today.

Keen rivalry exists between these clubs, and as a result the players have extended themselves to the limit in order to cop the larger percentage of the gate receipts, and the fans have been kept on edge by the fast and sensational fielding of the players of both teams.

Schneider has fully recovered from his recent illness and will be in first-class shape when he faces his opponents in today's game. This will probably be Schneider's last appearance on the diamond this winter as he expects to go shortly to the big league training camp. He is anxious to redeem himself for the former defeat at the hands of the Shipbuilders. Chet Thomas, the star catcher of the Boston Red Sox will be in the line-up for the Vernonites and will catch the curves of Schneider.

The same strong line-up of Coast and major leaguers will be seen in the fray, including Terry, Borton, Wotell, Chadbourne, Cook, Thomas, Cutshaw and Carl Sawyer, who will gas shell the fans with his brand new line of comedy. Brown and Cook will form the gunnery for the Merchants, and a large contingent of fans are expected from the Harbor to witness this battle, which is one of the few remaining games to be played in the winter circuit.

Orendorff and Chech will give the decisions and call the game promptly at 2:30 o'clock. The line-up follows:

Truck Transportation Problems.

Q.: Please give me available information as pertains to desert trucking. Is it preferable to use worm or gear-driven trucks for such work?

A.: Yes, worm-driven would be the best, with a low final drive gear ratio which would enable you to negotiate more of your haul in "high." Do not use a chain drive because sand and grit picked up by chain sprockets will tend to cut links and will continually give trouble. It is well to remember that worm-driven vehicles are in most cases dirt-proof.

Q.: What gear ratio should be used in four-ton truck that is hauling pipe daily over mountain roads? The roads traversed are very rutty and there are numerous chuck holes which on steep climbs impede the speed of the truck.

A.: From your description would suggest that you employ the use of a 10 1-3 final drive gearing. This would save wear and tear on transmission and motor.

Q.: I have a four-ton truck and make a specialty of hauling hay. What would be considered a capacity load if I added a four-ton trailer? Most of the hauling is done over paved roads.

A.: With your four-ton truck and with the proper trailer equipment and driven over paved roads, you should be able to haul all the State law will allow on the roads, which is twelve tons.

Q.: What is the most efficient clutch for trucking—cone or disc? Why?

A.: Disc. Because of soft engagement and lighter weight. There is less centrifugal force to stop when shifting gears. With a cone clutch there is a tendency for the leather to burn and get hard. It is also exposed and catches dirt and water.

This department is being conducted for the many persons in need of expert advice on questions of motor transportation. Address any query you may have in mind to the Truck Transportation Department of The Times and it will promptly be answered to the best of our ability.

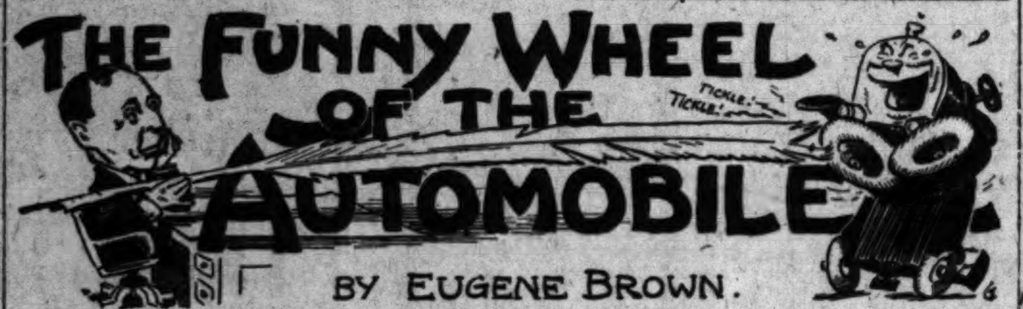
Q.: What is the most advantageous braking system? Braking on transmission, driveshaft, or direct braking to wheels?

A.: Direct braking to wheels is preferable. By braking more directly on the wheels braking strains on universal joints, drive shaft, differential and axles is thereby eliminated.

Q.: I am a daily reader of your paper, and, having seen the answer to the truck transportation problems in the Sunday issues, I am writing to ask you if you can give me some help in regard to the following: I have a 1912 three-ton KisselKar truck. The transmission when running in high, which is a gear (it being a four-speed forward gear set), is very noisy. When running in third speed ahead, which is direct drive, it is fairly quiet, but in high, when traveling with momentum, is very noisy. The bearings, I am told, are of the annular ball type. Recently I had the old bearings renewed with reground bearings, thinking thereby to eliminate the noise. The work was done by the Pacific KisselKar branch. As that failed to eliminate the noise, I had the transmission taken out and gone through by a very able mechanic, thinking that perhaps the employee who put the bearings in at the Pacific KisselKar branch had failed to adjust them properly. However, I found that everything was in good shape and could not be improved; that the gears and bearings were in very good shape; also I was informed that the annular ball bearing is inclined to be noisy. Now, I would like to know if such is the case and if there is any certain kind of grease I could use that would help eliminate the noise. I will appreciate any information you can give me and trust I may hear from you in the next Sunday issue.—E. H. DeM., San Dimas, Cal.

A.: Ball bearings are not noisy. Grease is not proper to use in transmission with ball bearings—the lubricant mostly used in transmissions of this type is 600 W gearcase oil. Transmissions are generally noisy when working through gears, but should be fairly quiet in high. If noisy in high the noise is in the gears that drive the countershaft or in the reverse idler. It may be that at some time that some of the gears in the transmission may have been made by someone outside of the KisselKar company and the teeth are not of the proper shape. Most transmissions have a special form of gear with a short, stubby tooth, and very few concerns have the proper cutters for these teeth.

THE FUNNY WHEEL OF THE AUTOMOBILE



Tickle! Tickle!

BY EUGENE BROWN.

ISN'T it wonderful how they can make regulations as fast as a fellow can break them?

Sometimes I think these good fellows we put into office turn wolves over night. At any rate they work overtime getting after us. Seems to me I can't go 'round the block without butting into some new-fangled rule made for the purpose of putting me in the nine hole. I'll bet now my leg is calloused half an inch thick from wearing a ball and chain. I've broken enough rock to make two Washington monuments and have enough left over to build a mausoleum for the Queen of Sheba.

There's a new set of rules out every month and a man has to be a double-entry book-keeper and a lightning calculator to keep up with them. If all the road and traffic regulations that have been put out were published in one instalment it would make the Encyclopedia Britannica look like a pale pink almanac.

At the same time most of us would be in jail or on the road.

Now they won't let me turn Lizzie around in the middle of the block. If I want reverse English I have to give her another swig of cough syrup and coax her along to the next corner. If I happen to get into a crush I may have to plug ahead and keep a-going until I get to the end of the street or into another State.

And they have the nerve to tell me that they are doing this for my own good. They say that some time when I am backing across the middle of the road I am liable to go to sleep and then some yellow car will butt into Lizzie and smash all of her ribs.

One smart aleck cop told me the garages were putting in turntables for hopheads like me. Don't I know it. Now I fool him and go there when I want to turn around. At one place they have a table with ball-bearings and when it is well oiled I can spin around until I get dizzy. The trouble with me is that it always seems to stop the same place it starts and it takes me an hour or two to get away.

The last time I was there I was dazed when the merry-go-round stopped and I backed down into the street and struck a car filled with pallbearers. I missed the hearse by twenty feet.

That night the judge came out to my place with the Gasoline Glee Club and they presented me with a magnificent individual ball and chain.

I suppose they thought they were smart.

But anyhow the ball and chain are made from the most sumptuous pig iron. The ball itself is a massive affair, weighing twenty-four pounds, and is made to replace one I lost while trying to run away from the stockade. It has my monogram daintily engraved on an aluminum plate accompanied by the slogan: "This round is on you." The chain is about three feet long and also very heavy. It is of the purest metal.

The judge made the presentation speech and I think there was a vein of sarcasm in his remarks. He said that they hoped I would continue to wear it as a token of their esteem—not for its intrinsic value, but for the associations it would suggest. The tie that binds is the dearest tie of all. "That ought to hold you for a while," said the judge in his peroration. As he concluded there wasn't a dry eye or a dry throat in the company.

They smoked up all my cigars and emptied my ice box and then staked me out on my own lawn just like any other goat.

Would I make a speech?

I would not.

The newspaper report of the affair next day gave the judge's remarks and then said that I was visibly affected and too full for utterance. At that I wasn't the only one.

Before they were chased away from the place the Glee Club, which is made up of those eminent Indians, Bugs Durant, Dock Chalmers, Butch Dodge, Kid Ford and Bones Studebaker, sang the grand old ballad, "The Good Old Ball and Chain," which goes to the familiar air of "Good Old Summer Time." The chorus is like this:

"Oh, the good old ball and chain;
The grand old ball and chain;
The finest thing you ever saw
To check a wobbly brain.
It sticks closer than a brother,
Oh! I would have no other,
So go and tell my mother,
I've a good old ball and chain."

This is tuneful and tender and all that, but after the boys had sung this about forty-three times it became monotonous. Even the neighbors who had gathered to cheer began to make coarse and critical remarks and a little short of midnight a vigilance committee persuaded the judge to take his charges home.

The next day when I was wearing my gift and had resumed my task of breaking up my country into small pieces a tourist stopped his car on the road leading by the stone quarry and gazed curiously at me for some time. Then he remarked:

"What are you carrying that chain for?"

I looked up at him and then removing my cap to expose the convolutions of my magnificent dome, I replied:

"To keep from skidding."

The stranger laughed in a sarcastic manner and retorted: "Quit this kidding me." Just like that.

My, but he was handy with it.

However, whatever honor attaches to the possession of the most beautiful individual ball and chain in the country is mine.

Lizzie helped me win it. In fact, without her I would not be here—at the rock pile—today.

LATEST MODELS COVER ALL TYPES OF AUTOS.

"WAIT till you see our new Velie models," enthusiastically exclaimed Sales Manager Lyman P. Clark of the Lord Motor Car Company in a conversation yesterday. "The people of Los Angeles have only seen a few of the Velie models thus far and will certainly be surprised and delighted with our new stock, which is being rushed to us as fast as transportation facilities will permit.

"The Velie Motors Corporation puts out a complete line of every type of automobile, and, as one might expect from the touring car, they are of the most stylish design possible. Augmenting our present stock of sedans and coupes, we are introducing the Velie town car, so favored by the society of the East. An additional supply of two and four-passenger roadsters are also on the way, embodying the most up-to-the-minute style of automobile design. The Velie four-passenger roadster is undoubtedly one of the snappiest little cars on the market and we have been unable to meet the demand for them this season.

MAKES HIT.

"We also have one of the famous Velie sport models on order which created much comment at the San Francisco automobile show. I believe the Velie sport model is the classiest sport car on the market, bar none. First, it has the regular Velie long-line effect, which allows a white high light to stream from the hood back to the rear in an unbroken line. Then the three big nickel exhaust pipes along the sides present an appearance of startling novelty which has attracted much attention back East. The white wire wheels, double rack of wheels on back, and the smart little top add the finishing touch.

CLASS THROUGHOUT.

"The appearance of the Velie has always attracted the discriminating eye of those desiring an aristocratic machine, and as for the mechanical angle, well, with a Red Seal Continental motor, Timken axles both front and rear, Remy ignition, dry-plate clutch, Rayfield carburetor and many other paramount features of construction, I don't see what else could be wished for, and, to top it all, the Velie is very moderately priced, as a comparison with other automobiles will readily demonstrate.

"The only thing that is worrying me is how we are going to get enough machines from the factory to supply the demand, once we have the full Velie display before the public."

SPEEDY SWEEPSTAKES ON CARD FOR SUNDAY.

THE 1917-1918 automobile racing, ushered in with a blaze of glory and a brilliant success last Thanksgiving Day, is going out the same way at Ascot Speedway, next Sunday.

In honor of the occasion—and also because they usually offer their patrons real races for their money—the Ascot heads have arranged a card for March 10 that promises more in the line of genuine racing sport than anything offered here this season. The George Washington Sweepstakes and the one-mile Blinkey Ben dash have drawn out a field of drivers that are top liners on any track in the world, and the gasoline hounds are assured of some genuine thrillers when George Adair drops his flag to send the demons on their way.

STARS.

While such stars as Barney Oldfield, Cliff Durant, Eddie Hearne and Tommy Milton would be enough in themselves to assure a crowd, the presence of several "come-backs" and new comers to the local course are making the March 10 card notable in many ways. Eddie Pullen, Joe Thomas, "Villa" Fred Horey and Brent Harding, the "kid" champion are all down on the programme as starters, and the old favorites must look to their laurels if they want to stay in the castor oiled spotlight.

Pullen is returning to the game after a year of quiet living. When he discarded his racing suit and goggles Eddie was about as popular an idol as ever was enthroned in Los Angeles. He had been driving consistently and daringly, taking his beatings and giving them, but always letting both the crowd and his opponents know something besides a prayer meeting had been going on. Now he is going to get back behind the wheel of a speed creation, and his many boosters are hoping a year "on the ground" has not impaired his nerve nor dimmed his eye.

OLD TIMERS.

Along with Pullen will come Joe Thomas, Eddie's team-mate in the days when the Mercer squad was cleaning up all the way from New York to Tacoma. Both Thomas and Pullen have been signed to drive the fast cars entered by Addison Brown, and the wealthy amateur will have the satisfaction of knowing he has signed two of the best drivers in the business to signal his debut into the gasoline sport.

Fred Horey will be the newcomer local fans will watch with particular interest. The "outlaw" demon has been burning 'em up in the East and Middle West for the past two years, the I.M.C.A. dope book showing him as possessor of all the mile dirt track records in captivity. Since coming here Horey has torn off miles in practice in close to record time, and with any sort of a break in racing luck, say the railbirds, he figures to give the older stars a real argument for the $5000 purse.

That a big crowd will say farewell to the winter racing season is indicated by the rush at the Dyas company for reserved seats and parking spaces.

Demand Class.

SOUTH AMERICA WANTS MORE ENCLOSED CARS.

THAT there has been a great increase in the number of high grade automobiles shipped to South America since this country entered the war, is the information received from the Cadillac factory by J. E. Brown, Los Angeles manager for Don Lee.

"In a zone adjacent to the parallel 35 degs., south latitude, extending across South America, 18 per cent. of the Type 57 cars shipped have been of the chauffeur-driven variety," said Brown. "The percentage of enclosed cars sold in the same north latitude across the United States is less than 5 per cent.

"Town limousines and town landaulets are going in batches to Buenos Aires, Valparaiso, Santiago and Montevideo. The South American family of wealth and social position, it seems, refuses to permit any of its members to drive a motor car or to even sit in the same compartment with the chauffeur. At the same time, the South American is beginning to realize the superior qualities of the enclosed car over the open type."

At the Cadillac factory one large building is given over to the boxing and crating of Cadillacs destined for shipment overseas. Automobiles shipped to foreign countries must be carefully boxed. These Cadillacs are handled and boxed with all the care one would bestow upon the boxing of a grand piano. When these boxes reach an American seaport, they will be lowered into the hold of a liner. If one should drop from the sling, the crate must not give way, which indicates that time and expense count in the boxing operation. Cars are prepared in this way for transportation to Argentina, Chili, Uruguay, Japan, Java, Manila, South Africa, Spain, the West Indies and other parts of the world.

Meets Demand.

SEDANS JUST RIGHT FOR US, SAYS FILM BEAUTY.

THE Lord Motor Car Company received a very pleasant word of commendation this week on their Velie sedan from Miss Bertha Corbit, a pretty little Triangle star.

"I recently made a trip to San Diego in my Velie sedan, said Miss Corbit, "and it was the first time I ever enjoyed the trip. I have always gone down on either the train or in an open car. Everyone knows all about being 'train tired'—that unpleasant feeling that lasts for hours after you get off, and everyone knows that "mussed-up' feeling after a long ride in an open machine, when your face is covered with dust and your hair is stringy. But I stepped out of my Velie in San Diego before the U. S. Grant Hotel feeling just as neat as when I left Los Angeles and I wasn't the least bit tired. The seats are so soft and springy that you can ride all day without getting tired and the Velie is the easiest running car I've ever been in.

"The sedan is very popular among the movie girls," continued Miss Corbit. "In the first place, we sometimes do a great part of our make-up at home in the morning before a picture and with a sedan we can arrive at the studio without suffering from the effects of the strong wind encountered in an open machine. Then at luncheon and between action we can jump into our sedans with the curtains down and run home without having to change to street attire. In the evenings when one goes to the theater, they can step out of their sedan spick and span without a single curl out of place, and when it rains and is cold the heating contrivance keeps everybody warm.

"The Lord Motor Car Company certainly has a warm place in my heart and also that salesman who persuaded me to buy a Velie sedan."

OXY GRIDIRON VETERAN DEAD.

Lewis E. Murray, a member of Occidental College's first football team, the famous eleven of 1895, was buried in Riverside Thursday. At the time of his death Murray was attended by Dr. S. M. Goodale, also a member of the first grid machine put out by the Tigers. Murray, under the guidance of Coach Sam Haskins, developed into one of the best ends in the south and, although he weighed in at 135, tackled like a battering ram, as well as kicking goals for the Bengals. Members of the '95 team living in Los Angeles sent a floral remembrance to the funeral.

WINTER TROUT SEASON ENDED.

Next Action for Fly Rod Men in April up Coast.

Wonderful Sport Lot of Surf Spoon Experts.

Southern Anglers may Enjoy Fun Almost All Year.

By long odds the best midwinter trout-season Southern Californian angling-licensees ever knew, closed last night with the month of February; and now the fly-rodsters will find nothing further to do beyond fussing with their tackle until fishing opens again in the up-Coast counties of Fish and Game District No. 3, on April 1. The rest of the South waits another month until May 1.

Favored by an exceptionally dry winter which held the big "breeders" bar-bound at the mouths of the Santa Ynez, Ventura and Santa Clara rivers weeks longer than normally, experts at the surf-steelhead game enjoyed some wonderful sport with these huge trout, some as long as a gun-barrel and in pink of condition, blue-backed as any salmon, brilliant beneath and shining in the silvery armor they put on in the breeding season. Fish of up to thirteen pounds were landed. A few fortunate anglers who happened to be at the right place at the right time when the big 'uns took one of their wild fancies to snap at anything that flashed past them, succeeded in killing their limits of five beauties in a red-letter day of the most royal kind of sport.

Although opposed to killing "breeders" of any species on general principles, the Fish and Game Commission has so generally demonstrated the success of California's fish cultural methods that some of its experts have concluded that the supply in up-Coast rivers can be kept up by artificial plantings against a reasonable catching of "spawners" each year. The season just ended demonstrated that a considerable number of ripe trout would come to nothing in years when rains came late, owing to their spawn advancing too far before the fish could enter the streams; and in normal years, they soon run up out of harm's way, ceasing to bite a few days after they get into fresh water. Relatively few anglers in the excellent season just ended, killed their daily limit of five, most being well satisfied with one or two as a fine day's work either to look at, or to use as the basis of a dinner-party to tell how 'twas done.

NEW GAME FOR THE SOUTH.

Adding further proof of the versatility of the sepcies, these lusty rainbow trout, by thus snapping at brass spoons right out in the surf, cast to them by anglers wading in thigh-deep like corbina fishermen, gave Southern California a new and typically distinct game. It calls for a husky twelve-foot "light salmon" or "steelhead" rod, about the limit of one-hand tackle, and perhaps better double-handed. Wet, and hard work, it appeals to stout, earnest anglers, some of whom enjoyed truly royal battles up the coast, although as a whole the fish hardly fight up to their poundage, acting as if exhausted by the incessant strife with breakers and bars. Often the fish are hooked right at the angler's feet. On the whole, the best sport was enjoyed in the lagoon at Surf, where the entrance to the Santa Ynez remains open. Fish are to be found in the brackish water most of the time and boats were available, giving the option of trolling or casting a spoon.

LOS ANGELES.

Bright and early next Sunday morning some twenty pill-chasers of the Los Angeles ball club will breeze away to San Diego for their annual siege of spring training. Their destination will be the handsome San Diego Stadium, where they are slated to gambol about for the next three weeks. Manager Wade Killifer and Trainer Doc Finlay will leave several days ahead of the big push to scout around for a guaranteed grub joint, charter a hotel or two and become acclimated.

Although several contracts have not been heard from, Killifer and Prexy Johnnie Powers predict that by the time of the training trip, last year's aggregation will be intact with the exception of Bassler, who has tacitly announced his intention of holding out.

Eight practice games will be indulged in by the Seraphs during their sojourn in the south. Most of these are with army and navy nines, while on March 22 the Chicago Cubs will be taken on. "The boys will know that they haven't been on a little pleasure jaunt by the time that we get through with them," Powers stated while discussing the details of the trip.

Several local youths of promise are due for a tryout with the Angels. One of these is Ford Tally, a Poly High chucker, while Bill Pertica, a precocious star of the winter league will be given a chance on the mound. "Big Chief" Jamieson, an Indian hurler, is due to report, but will not be on hand until later in the season because of an acute attack of the measles. It appears from all angles that the Angels will have a balanced, smooth-working machine in operation by the start of the season.

VERNON.

With pitchers and catchers ordered to report tomorrow and the balance of the team scheduled to start work on March 11, one week later, Manager Bill Essick of the Vernon Tigers is presenting a worried frown to the world at large, these days. Although "Big Bill" persists in being mysterious and camouflaging the intents of himself and owner, Tom Darmody under a modest reticence rumor has it that the Tigers would welcome a few more signed contracts with a reception similar to that tendered to the well-known prodigal son.

OLD FACES.

Essick expects to line up on the first day of the season with every member of last year's nine on hand with the exception of Jack Callahan. In addition to these stock celebrities the former Grand Rapids pilot has secured four performers from the big leagues. According to the Vernon disclosure of the identity of these talented horsehide hounds at present would wreck the ranks of organized baseball irreparably. Suffice it to say that Essick's recent trip East resulted in the securing of a pitcher, catcher, outfielder and infielder, presumably from the American Association. These celebrities will not be free to report until after the opening of the Coast League season, so the fans are promised several weeks more of agonizing suspense.

FIERCE.

Since the Los Angeles club will conduct spring training at the San Diego Stadium, Vernon will use Washington Park for the pre-season ceremonies. The proximity of a movie jungle crammed with growling lions and roaring bruins determined Tom Darmody's mind in selecting this battle ground for the festivities. Tom, who is a conscientious psychologist, relies implicitly in the power of suggestion and expects the savage chorus just over the fence to instill remarkable fighting qualities in his proteges.

SACRAMENTO.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

Sacramento (Cal.) March 2.—Monday morning, bright and early, Bill Rodgers and his husky shock battalion will make their debut bow before local fans at Buffalo Park and thereafter immediate intensive training will be under way without stay or letup until April 2 when they will take on the Vernon Tigers for the initial game of the season.

All Sacramento is on its toes and if enthusiasm is potent in the matter of winning pennants, the Senators will prove formidable contenders. A drive, sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce, has just been concluded with the result that practically every dollar's worth of stock in the enterprise has been taken by men whose support is important in insuring success.

PRACTICE GAMES.

On March 9 and 10 the Senators will meet Rod Murphy's strong team of marines from Mare Island which will give the wise talent an opportunity of getting an illuminating slant on the possibilities of the aggregation which Rodgers has assembled from the four corners of the country.

During a recent scouting trip, which included Los Angeles, Rodgers set out a number of lines for additional material with which to strengthen his present lineup.

He may sign up Joe Wagner or Johnny Butler for the shortstop position. Wagner played with Cincinnati when Rodgers was on that team, and Butler played with Portland a few seasons ago. He is now connected with the Lincoln club of Western League, but may be secured on waiver.

Pete McKenry is a good pitcher who played with Cincinnati, during Rodgers's connection with that team, and is a possibility for Sacramento as he wishes to come to the Coast. Rodgers said last night that he had booked another practice game with the university team at the Davis Agricultural School for March 20. At present Rodgers's line-up reads: Gus Fisher, catcher; Dennis Wille, outfielder; Babe Borton and Art Griggs, first basemen; Ralph Pinelli, infielder; Harry Gardner, Herb Brenton, pitchers.

The above named players Rodgers secured in the deal with Portland. Rodgers has signed the following since taking the club: Easterly, catcher; Hi West, pitcher; Prentice and Jackson, outfielders; McNulty and Wickert, infielders; J. Bromley, pitcher. The latest addition to the roster of the Sacramento Senators is Jack Bromley, a pitcher, who is well known to the local fans, through his efforts with the Oakland Pacific Coast League team and the Chico aggregation of the past but never to be forgotten Trolley League. He has been pitching in the Copper League in Arizona and was recommended to Rodgers by one of the pilot's friends who is playing down there.

A National League club has offered Rodgers four players for purchase, two of whom are outfielders, one a second baseman and the other a pitcher. Rodgers immediately set the telegraph wires to working on looking up the records of these players. The report that Bill received from some reliable source is that all the players offered are good men. An effort is also being made to sign "Brick" Elder for the infield.

SALT LAKE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

Salt Lake City, March 2.—Secretary Jack Cook, of the Bees, yesterday sent out his first transportation to players, a fact which bears silent testimony to the actual state of affairs—the Salt Lake club, like many of the others is experiencing some difficulty in coming to terms with its players. There are no down right hold-outs on the Bee roster, but almost all of the boys are asking for a raise, notwithstanding uncertain baseball conditions. The Bees have made but a few slight cuts on players from last year's club and the management feels that the boys should be reasonable. It appears that some of them will have to be.

HOLDOUTS.

In no instance is there any serious difference on the matter of salary and it is believed all salary matters will be satisfactorily adjusted by Monday. One or two of the boys are asking for salaries that are entirely out of reason and, probably they will be forgotten entirely. Ward Miller, outfielder obtained from the Browns, is one of these.

Paddy Siglin, Jack Farmer, Earl Sheely and Bill Frieborn have been sent transportation with orders to report at Porterville.

Among the boys who are asking for more money are Karl Crandall, Larry Chappell and Walter Leverenz. The difference between club and players, however, is so slight that there should be no serious difficulty on their score.

The club has heard nothing definite from the Browns relative to Second Baseman Pete Johns, who was turned over to McCredie a few weeks ago. With Paddy Siglin, Bill Orr and Karl Crandall for the left side of the diamond, however, no one appears to be worrying.

KINKY.

The catching problem is a serious one. Manager Fielder Jones, of the Browns, told McCredie that he might have George Hale in time for the Bee training period, but Secretary Bobby Quinn insists that the Browns will have to carry the player on their training trip until April 15, something which does not make a hit with McCredie. The Salt Lake manager is taking no chances on this score as is shown by the fact that he wired headquarters yesterday saying that he has two real catchers on his string, but that he is not yet ready to divulge their names. It is doubtful therefore if George Hale will become a Bee after all.

The pitching staff at present shapes up with Walter Leverenz, Rube Evans, Ken Penner, Jean Dubuc, Tim McCabe and Al Gould. Ollie Kirmayer is still under a doctor's care in this city and will be of no service to the club. McCredie is negotiating with St. Louis, Detroit, New York and Cleveland, all of the American League, for at least two more chuckers. While March 4 is the date set for the opening of the Bee training quarters, it is highly likely that it will be well to the end of next week before a majority of the boys get in.

TIRE ECONOMY IS REAL PATRIOTISM.

"People talk patriotic economy and many of them keep putting off the day of beginning practicing it. The time is right here—this minute—when all the people of the country have got to get down to cases in this win-the-war business. The more we procrastinate the harder is the task we have before us," said Roy R. Meads, general manager for the Pacific Rubber Company, distributor of horseshoe tread tires.

"Patriotic economy should be practiced in the buying of tires as well as in the buying of anything else. And as in other things, the economy spirit should not end its expression in the mere buying. Conserving what you have on hand as long as you can is a big factor. If motorists would get all the possible mileage out of their tires they must use care in driving."

Business.

CUB TRIP NOT FOR PLEASURE.

Mitchell will Keep Crowd Extremely Busy.

Will Cut Down His Squad Before Leaving.

Expects Hollocher to be a Genuine Star.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO BUREAU OF THE TIMES, Feb. 28.—Fred Mitchell, "Big Bear" of the Cubs aggregation, who arrived from the East yesterday and has been busy ever since whipping his assortment into shape for the training trip to California, announced tonight that he had the situation fairly well in hand.

Heavy wet snow and colder weather which crept upon the city without warning during the night, served as an added impetus to get away from the drear and bleak Middle West into the sunshine and clear air of California, and buckle down to the business of limbering up the athletes for the season. Mitchell realizes his team must travel fast and untiringly to count in the race against the Giants, Cincinnati and St. Louis this season, and wants all his men on their toes. He figures that the sojourn under the friendly skies of the Golden State will be a fine start in this direction.

Some of the details of the training trip have not been completed, but the team will start for Pasadena on March 12. The management has not yet finally decided what railroad will be chosen. One line offers two sleepers and one diner, while another promises two sleepers and no diner, but gives assurances of first-class meals at convenient stations along the road. The idea of a special train was abandoned some time ago, when the Federal government began to frown severely upon such luxuries.

Manager Mitchell says the training trip will be strictly a business affair, devoid of frills. He said this evening: "This is to be a training trip in every sense of the word. It is to be strictly business from the start. There is no time for any pleasure jaunts or excursions. It is the shortest training season we have ever had and consequently there must be more work crowded into the four weeks than we have ever done before in the early weeks. I expect to find most of the men in pretty good condition when they report. They will not be spared when the regular stuff starts and they will have to stand the gaff if they are not in shape."

Manager Mitchell has not heard from most of the men yet, but expects to get a line on the probable make-up of the party within a few days. There will be no guests and the players will not be allowed to take their wives with them.

"Last spring Manager Mitchell complained of having too many men on the trip," said Craighead. "He was unable to do himself or the players justice. This year he asked that we take only twenty-five or twenty-six men to Pasadena, saying he would take the responsibility of molding a first-class ball club out of that number. We are pleasing him now. After the training trip and the regular season opens it will be up to him to please us and the Chicago fans. This we think he will do and he is confident of having much better success than last summer."

The club may find it difficult to dispose of the players it does not need. Then again it is likely to be fortunate in using several of them in a trade of some nature.

Mitchell settled down to the business of trying to figure a combination that would make the Bruins a pennant contender in 1918. It took him all day to sum up the problem but at the finish, Mitchell announced that the only department that needed expert attention was the infield and he has not given up hope yet of finding an infield star or two among his youngsters.

"We have enough outfield material for two or three major league teams," the Big Bruin asserted, "and at least four of the outpost candidates are stars. In Killifer, Elliott and Daly we have the best backstoppers in the league, and the same goes for the pitchers, with Alexander on the job. That leaves the infield to worry over and I am going to inform each of my recruits that his chances are just as good as the veterans. This ought to liven up the scrap for jobs, and permit me to get a true line on the boys."

Even though the recruits should fall down, leaving the boss only his veterans to work with, Mitchell says he will not be as bad off as most people believe. This would mean that Merkle, Kilduff, Hollocher and Deal would comprise the inner works. Merkle and Deal are veterans, guarding the corner positions, leaving the youngsters, Kilduff and Hollocher to care for the keystone sack. Kilduff finished 1917 as a shortstop, but his natural position is second, while Hollocher earned his reputation shortstopping for Portland, last summer.

This leaves Chuck Wortman, Charley Pechous and Rollie Zeider to be accounted for in the battle for regular positions. Of this trio the veteran Zeider is sure to be retained as general handy man, for Rollie plays all positions alike good. Wortman and Pechous, shortstop and third baseman, respectively, are youngsters, although Wortman has been a Cub since 1916. He was purchased from Kansas City for a huge sum, boasted as a coming star. Last season when he started to hit his true form, an injury put him out of the going and by the time he recovered, some one else was playing short in bang up style and Chuck remained on the bench.

If, by any chance, the sensational Hollocher should show ability to take care of the third base job, it is possible that Wortman will win himself a regular home at short. As a fielder he has few equals, but his hitting has been a few points below the big league standard.

In any event, Mitchell figures that when he gets his men into the open in California he will require but a few days to choose the right players for each position.

OAKLAND.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

Oakland, Mar. 2.—This time last year the Oaks were a good deal of a joke, for Del Howard was a new man on the job and the team seemed to be all shot to pieces. But Del went right along about his business and turned out a bunch that ran the leaders ragged for a while. It was an in and out aggregation and when it was in it could kick the tar out of any team in the league, as Los Angeles fans have reason to recall. When the club was "out" it could not beat a rag carpet.

This year Oakland is starting with a whale of a pitching staff, for Prough, Goodbred, Krause, Speed Martin and Kremer are good enough for any club in this company. High-class infielders are needed to replace Rod Murphy, now in the Marines, and Bill Stumpf, who is going to Pittsburgh. Two catchers are also needed and a good fly chaser is wanted to replace Billy Lane, who will not play ball this year. Howard will get the outfielder and the catchers all right, but it will take some skirmishing to replace Murphy and Stumpf, who played great ball for the Oaks.

BACK.

Middleton and Hack Miller will be in the outfield again; Rube Gardner will be on first; Arlett at second, and perhaps Jack Roache, a hard-hitting catcher will return. He jumped the team to play in the Copper League last summer but he now wants to come back. Honus Mitze was a free agent at the expiration of last season, but he is hanging around Oakland and it would not take much persuasion to have him back again. He steadied the Oaks wonderfully after he joined them. Del Howard is working with a flock of youngsters every day in the Oakland Park and he may pick up a couple of men who will do him some good. Chicken Hawke, a former runner for the Olympic Club, is trying for an outfield berth and if he makes it, the prediction is made that he will be the fastest man in the league on the bases. He is a sprinter, and a good one.

The Oaks will go to Boyes's Springs Sunday and will stay there until they come home March 23, to play Rod Murphy and his Marines. They are to play the Chicago Cubs right after that so Howard will keep them at home until time to open the season. Speed Martin looked to be one of the best pitchers in the league after he came back from St. Louis, and as he has been pitching on Sundays all winter, he is in shape right now to hop in and do a day's work. He should add a lot of strength to the club for he is a hard worker and he likes to win. If Howard can get two steady infielders who can hit, the Oaks will cause plenty of trouble. No one predicts a pennant for them, but they will be far from a joke team.

SAN FRANCISCO.

[BY DIRECT WIRE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

San Francisco, Mar. 2.—Charley Graham, the new boss of the Seals, is now on the job and will accompany the champions to Fresno to train for another flag. Charley has been so hard at work putting over deals and delving into figures that it will be quite a relief for him to devote his entire time and attention to baseball—a subject with which he is thoroughly familiar and one that he knows a lot about.

While the dickering was being carried on for the sale of the Seals, Jerry Downs kept plugging away. He could not do much for he had no money with which to work, and he did not know whether the club was to be sold, but he did get in touch with players and he has sized up the strong and weak points of the club until he thinks he knows just what the team needs in the way of additions to make it a contender for first honors next season. The team that won the pennant last year was a strong, well balanced aggregation, coming out on top despite accidents that put the catching staff out entirely. Of the old gang, Olaf Erickson, the tall pitcher who won more games than any other twirler in the land, will be missed most. His place will be mighty hard to fill.

GONE.

George Maisel, a nervy and brainy, though not a showy player, is another who will be sadly missed. The fans did not realize how good he was until he got hurt and the team seemed to speed up when he got back on the job. Maisel is going into the service of his country, thus missing a chance to try out with Detroit.

Del Baker, leading catcher of the Seals last year, is another who has gone. He is now in the Naval Reserve and his batting and base running will be missed. Red McKee, who helped Baker last year, is coming back. But McKee did not show particular class except in spots last season and unless he shows more this year the Seals will need help behind the bat.

RETURNED.

The infield will be intact, for Koerner, Downs, Corhan and Pick will be on the job again. That will be a big help, for they are all veterans and steady performers, but there are some awful gaps in the outfield. Justin Fitzgerald, for three years lead-off man and boss slugger of the Seals, has been drafted by the Philadelphia Nationals and, although he probably would not have reported because of the small salary offered him, he is lost to the Seals. Biff Schaller has retired from baseball, so another reliable man is gone. Until last year Biff did not miss a single game while a member of the San Francisco club and could either drive the ball out or lay it down. A tricky man on bases, he was a powerful factor on the attack. With Maisel, Fitzgerald and Schaller all gone, the Seals need some help in the outfield.

So far Spider Baum and Chief Johnson look like the mainstays of the pitching staff. Help is needed.

CORD TIRES
How the conditions which meant efficiency before the war mean a public saving now

The economy methods which, long before the war, prevailed in the Firestone factory have simply anticipated today's demands for judicious buying, conservation of resources and war on waste.

This war against waste in the Firestone factory means war against waste on the road. For the values thus conserved go back into the product which more and more is recognized as the tire of Most Miles per Dollar.

This is more than a Firestone slogan, more than a working motto of the organization. National stress and the need of thrift now make Most Miles per Dollar a sound American doctrine.

More and more the world-affairs today require that you use your car. But more and more patriotism and common sense alike order that you use it wisely and at lowest upkeep cost. Experience proves that this means Firestone equipment. Get Firestones from your dealer now.

PROGRESS AND PRODUCTION

SUNDAY MORNING, MARCH 3, 1918.

PLANTING PROFITABLE TREES FOR SHADE AND ADORNMENT.

BY R. BRINSMEAD.

FEW, perhaps, realize the extent to which the Southern California vegetable garden may be supplemented by a judicious planting of nut and fruit-producing trees and shrubs on the average city lot and suburban "acre farm." The opportunity for combining beauty and profit in the embellishment of our home lots and gardens is almost limitless; the necessity for planting nonprofit-producing trees and shrubs nonexistent. Available fruit and nut-bearing trees and shrubs include many varieties of rare beauty, both as to foliage and blossom.

Where planted in conjunction with the garden, the fruit tree requires little or no care other than that being given to the crop growing alongside. Where grown by itself, it takes far less work to produce a fruit crop than to grow a vegetable crop. Where replacing the strictly ornamental shade tree or shrub, the profitable fruit tree will as a rule require no more care than its predecessor.

The variety of shade trees more generally planted in Southern California is remarkably small and this also is the case with the shrubs in universal use for hedging and as ornamentals. The pepper, eucalyptus, cypress, umbrella, gravillea, and palm practically exhaust the list of shade trees, and for the hedge row the cypress, privet and laurestina are generally used. Our list of available fruit and nut-bearing trees and shrubs however, is infinitely greater, and in its variety loses nothing of the beauty of the generally-planted ornamentals.

WHAT TO PLANT.

Where an evergreen is not essential some of the nuts make excellent roadside shade trees. The budded soft-shell walnut, Italian chestnut and pecan serve this purpose admirably. Planted 40 feet apart, they may be interset with such dwarf trees as the Japanese kumquat (orange) and shrub-like feijoa. The Mission and Manzanillo olives can be used in some locations, and will make handsome shade trees where properly handled and pruned, in addition to providing fruit for pickling. One of the handsomest of shade trees in the more protected locations is the avocado. The soft-shells will as a rule be found to make the largest and thriftiest trees. Both the fig and apricot will be found strong and rapid growers, providing ample summer shade, and both are prolific in their fruiting.

The Washington navel, Valencia late, tangerine, blood orange and grapefruit, planted from twenty-two to thirty feet apart, form handsome backgrounds for the front yard, the feijoa, lime, guava, Natal plum or Kai apple being adapted for hedge rows and for shrubs around lawns and border beds. Dwarf plums and apples, with their glorious spring bloom, can also be used to advantage. Pruned low, the quince as a shrub provides the freshest of foliage through the summer, and is readily trained to fill in any desired gap or corner.

For shade trees around the house deciduous trees would as a rule be the best, as they would not shut the winter sunshine away. The budded walnut, chestnut, apricot, fig and plum are to be recommended, all growing readily and being prolific in production.

For lawn trees and shrubs there are few handsomer trees than the hard-shell avocado, the brilliant-foliaged, shrub-like feijoa, or strawberry guava, the pomegranite, with its moderate growth and handsome bloom; the quince, with its handsome foliage; the persimmon, with its ample summer leafage and bright winter fruit.

FOR THE GARDEN.

For boundary or lot lines almost any standard deciduous tree may be planted. The apple, pear, apricot, peach, cherimoya, sapota, plum, cherry or nectarine, all would serve.

Along path and bed borders, where there is ample room, the blackberry and loganberry can be readily trained along low frames, handy for picking and taking up but little room from the vegetable garden itself.

For the pergola, arbor or trellis, is nothing handsomer than the passion vine (Passiflora edulis,) evergreen and prolific in the production of delicious [illegible] and ice cream flavorings. The grape, of course, is always available for covering the arbor or pergola, especially where winter sunshine is needed. On arbor and trellis the peach, apple and plum among the decidouous, and the avocado, loquat and lemon of the evergreens can be readily and profitably trained.

For covering the house or barn wall the deciduous fruit is probably the best, and the peach and pear and plum can be easily trained while the edible passion vine, avocado, and even the orange, can be trained to provide excellent evergreen covering. The chayota, grapevine and guava form excellent means of covering the boundary fence.

The above list is of necessity brief, and far from covers the entire list of fruits which can be used, or the uses to which they may be put. The raspberry, currant and gooseberry can always be used to fill in the odd corner, and are always welcome on the table, fresh or preserved. It is neither suggested that all the fruits mentioned are adapted to every location, nor that it would be possible to use them all on one small lot.

In making selection of the trees and shrubs to be set out the householder should be careful that the ones chosen are the best for both local conditions and for the purpose for which they are being planted. When such care is used in selection and planning it is astonishing the quantity and quality of the fruits that can be produced on the smallest lot.

Plant a fruit or nut tree in every available place on the lot or acre, and do it now! There is no better time to set out the young fruit tree than immediately following the soaking spring rains, which, sinking deep, thoroughly saturate the ground and give the young tree a good start in life.

In Europe, and notably in France, the plan of planting fruit and nut trees for both ornamental and profitable purposes has prevailed for centuries. Much of the nut crop, which yields France so good a revenue in times of peace, is produced from roadside and garden plantings. California could add enormously to her annual production of both fruit and nuts if her people generally were to adopt this excellent and feasible plan.

IS LOS ANGELES DOING ITS BEST IN FOOD PRODUCTION?

BY LILLIAN C. FORD

SUGGESTIONS have been made recently in the editorial columns of the real estate department of The Times to the effect that the thousands of acres in unimproved subdivisions and other vacant lands in the city and county should be put under cultivation this year. The need for concerted and immediate action has been pointed out. Organization, direction, co-operation, are needed to make this a movement of far-reaching importance. The land is now in excellent condition for plowing; irrigation water for use later on is available; plenty of labor to do the work would no doubt be forthcoming, once the plan was under way. Elderly men, retired farmers, those able to work only a few hours a day, would undoubtedly volunteer for such service if called upon. Young women, able, energetic, willing, would fill any gaps left by the men, as they have in the East and in every one of the warring nations of Europe.

We need the food. We have the land; we have the water; we have the labor; all that is lacking to this movement is prompt and energetic action on the part of individuals possessed with the power of leadership or on the part of clubs and societies farseeing enough to realize the importance of the proposal.

It is becoming a trite saying that the world needs more food. We all patriotically agree that the situation is becoming an alarming one, but individually we go on playing golf, or tennis, or pool; we spend our spare time in motoring, in gossiping or in crocheting those interminable yokes, as the case may be, while the yoke of Kaiserism is threatening the world. We are being asked to make some little effort to increase food production; if we do not respond the time may come when we will ourselves feel the pangs of hunger. It is only because the government is now protecting our domestic food supply, retaining for home consumption ample sufficiency for all our [illegible] use of substitutes here and there, that we are still able to load our tables with both staple foods and high-priced luxuries. It is this very sufficiency that makes it so difficult to realize the truth; that keeps us from making a definite effort to do something to add to the world's food supply.

PLAN'S POSSIBILITIES.

The home garden movement is an excellent one; it accomplished something last year, and promises to do more this year. But that is not enough. Every acre of tillable and irrigable land in this city should be put under crop this year, and should be so well cultivated and cared for as to produce the maximum. On the thousands of acres long since subdivided but not as yet improved with buildings, literally tons and thousands of tons of food could be produced. This is no idle dream, but a fact. With the will to do, wonders can be accomplished this year. The planting season for many crops has just begun; others can be planted in almost any month in the year in this State; second crops of some of the most-needed staples, such as corn and potatoes, are entirely practicable. With an organization directing the operations of these subdivision farming operations, the work could be carried on economically, efficiently, successfully.

While the objection may be made that amateur farming does not pay, the fact that scores of retired farmers are now making their homes in this city and that most of them would be glad to be called to the colors in an advisory capacity must be taken into consideration. Then, too, we have the newly-organized County Farm Bureau, with the farm adviser and his corps of assistants, all brimfull of scientific knowledge as to seeds and soils and bugs and things, and ready and willing to give expert advice.

As to the best crops to plant on these available city tracts, the choice is wide. On the smaller tracts, of from five to ten acres, vegetables of good keeping quality, such as potatoes, beans, peas, cabbages and onions might be raised. On the tracts ranging in size from ten to twenty acres such standard field crops as corn and the grain sorghums, such as milo maize, Egyptian corn, or feterita, might be profitably grown. On still larger areas barley, either for hay or for grain, would be a valuable crop. While it is rather late for this crop, with irrigation it should be successful.

The production of such forage crops as kafir corn, sweet sorghums, Sudan grass, cow peas and soy beans, which require comparatively little cultivation and irrigation, might still be practicable. With the scarcity of feed for cattle, swine and other farm animals, an effort to increase the supply and so indirectly to insure more milk and butter and meat, is worth consideration. A market for such crops could be arranged for in advance, preferably at home. This would encourage more city dwellers to keep a family cow or goat, which are wonderfully efficient machines for converting such forage into human food.

Since poultry feed is so high in price as to seriously menace that industry, a concerted effort might be made to produce grain to be supplied at a fair price to city or county residents who could make good use of it. Every effort should be made to keep up the egg production, and so to decrease the demand for meat and other foodstuffs needed for export.

ALFALFA, TOO.

On land peculiarly adapted for that purpose, alfalfa might still be planted. It improves the land, prepares it for a future crop of potatoes, and supplies a generous amount of stock feed per acre. Such staple root crops as mangels, beets and turnips, and even the festive pumpkin and the stock melon, might be planted where conditions indicated success, for all of these will help to keep the supply of live stock and so to keep things normal. In Germany, the first year of the war saw a large part of the swine slaughtered, followed as the food scarcity grew worse by cattle and sheep and poultry. The very same danger now threatens the United States; by facing the danger now and doing our [illegible]

SHADE CREATED BY SHRUBS AND TREES BEST FOR FOWLS.

BY HENRY W. KRUCKEBERG.

SHADE in the summer time is greatly appreciated by fowls and adds much to their physical comforts and productiveness. That created by shrubs and trees is preferable to that provided by artificial means, which fact reminds us that now is the ideal time to think about trees in the poultry yards and their surroundings. Not only is it important to make intelligent selection as to varieties now, but it is also the time in which to plant. A decidous tree seems preferable to an evergreen for shade, as in winter the birds are as alive to sunshine as they are in summer to shade. And here economic values can be observed and fruit trees planted alike for their crops and shade. The apple, the apricot, the plum, the walnut—all have their virtues, and where prevailing conditions are favorable, any one or more can be recommended.

For a dense and quick shade the mulberry has much in its favor. It is a rapid grower, has a large leaf which grows luxuriantly and provides a dense shade, and the fowls will eat freely of its berry fruits. In the fall it sheds its foliage rather quickly, thus allowing free access of sunshine when most needed.

In buying trees, observe quality—plants with good tops and a vigorous root system. In planting be sure and dig the holes large, so that the roots may be spread out in their natural formation. It is better to plant a 10-cent tree in a $1 hole than to place a $1 tree in a 10-cent hole. An enriching of the soil will accelerate the growth. In addition to fruit trees there are other trees that will serve, such as the poplars, sycamores, umbrella, weeping elms, etc. Plant trees of some kind. They make the best shade and are greatly appreciated by bird life.

Potatoes too small or too badly injured for human use are still valuable as hog feed, especially if boiled. In the form of pork they will bring real money. In the shipper's dump pile they are a total loss.

TRAPPING AS A "SIDE LINE" FOR THE BOYS OF THE FARM.

BY HERTA CURME DAVIS.

BECAUSE of the blizzards which have this season swept the country from the Dakotas to the Gulf, thus stopping trapping in many States and delaying shipment of furs, many fur concerns are making special appeals to Californians for furs, and at prices never before approached. Even common rabbit skins which are used for making hats for soldiers are now selling at 35 to 45 cents per pound, dried and stretched, and the demand is for quantities far in excess of the present supply. Thus a very profitable side line for the busy rancher or for the farm boy is offered, California, as usual, having the advantage over other localities because of the facility with which the business can be followed.

Among the boys in the foothill sections of Southern California who have for several years past seized the advantages offered in this ranch by-product, as well as having materially aided the home ranch and surrounding neighborhood in ridding the infested brush of a considerable number of "varmints," is Henry Ellis of the Ellis ranch, near Descanso, Cal. He gives a full report of a season's trapping several years ago, when he kept a hundred traps out through the months of November, December, January and February, looking at each trap every day. He sold furs to the value of $312.40 that season, and says that at present prices the same furs would bring considerably more than double that amount.

The animals caught by this boy during that one season were: Six coyotes, the skins selling at from $1 to $3 each; twenty skunks, at from 50 cents to $2 each; seven coons, bringing from $1 to $4; seventeen "bobcats," or lynx cats, at $1 to $3, and thirty gray fox, selling at from $1 to $2.75 each. Later he learned to tan the hides and make them up into rugs, which he readily sold at an average of about $10 each.

Fur-bearing animals are now protected by the California Fish and Game Commission, and in order to trap, a license, which costs $1, must be obtained. However, with common gray fox and "bobcats," which are (as every farmer's wife who has attempted to raise turkeys or chickens in the brush-covered foothill section knows only too well,) lamentably common in Southern California, bringing at present prices an average of $3 for the fox and $4.75 for the cat skins, the defense of the poultry yard would seem a most commendable and timely undertaking.

It must be added that even the small skunks of the common striped variety, which are able to create such havic in a chicken pen, and neglect no opportunity to do so, are now bringing at wholesale prices direct to the producer, an average of very close to $2.50 each. Coyotes, one of the worst pests the foothill and mountain ranches has continually to fight, will bring him an average of $4.50 for the skin of every one he kills, even though only of medium grade and size, good skins now bringing up to $8. In all cases the prices quoted are those now being paid for average, medium grade skins, and run several dollars higher for extra-good specimens.

"The attention of the War Department has been very seriously centered upon the task of interfering with the labor of the farms as little as possible, and under the new draft regulations I believe that the farmers of the country will find that their supply of labor is very much less seriously drawn upon than it was under the first and initial draft, made before we had our present full experience in these perplexing matters. The supply of labor in all industries is a matter we must look to and are looking to with diligent care."—[President Wilson.

LET THE CHILDREN RAISE RABBITS.

BY HERTA CURME DAVIS.

In contemplating the addition of rabbits to our back lot scheme of food production the first question naturally is, "Will it pay?" And, of course, this means both in the time and effort, as well as the money expended.

In coming to conclusions on this subject a number of things must be considered. The actual cost of food is rather difficult to determine where rabbits are utilized, as they may be with the exercise of due precautions, as a substitute for the garbage can. Where rabbits are fed entirely on purchased feeds, as in the large rabbitries, the actual figures are more easily obtainable, though varying with different systems of management.

My own estimates have always been made from the cost of maintaining the doe, and, even at present prices for food, the corresponding rise in the price of meat and in the skins, for which there is now a ready sale, should maintain the yearly profit per doe at close to the average of $3 per year, where all food is purchased. This is double the amount earned by a good hen, and is a very conservatively estimated profit on a rabbit's yearly production.

Where properly handled, each rabbit doe should kindle every ten weeks. To produce the best results, she should not be allowed to raise more than six young each time, though in many cases ten or more fine, healthy specimens mature in a single litter. Where much individual care can be given, as in the small family rabbitry, this can far more frequently be the case.

Therefore, an estimate of twenty-five young each year for each doe is a low average, even allowing for accidental fatalities. At the age of 8 to 10 weeks, where steady growth has been made through the right care in feeding and handling, each young rabbit should have reached marketable age, these "fryers" weighing about a pound and a half each, dressed.

Especially where being raised for home consumption, many feel that allowing the rabbits to mature is a profitable meat producing investment. At the age of 5 to 6 months a rabbit should dress four pounds of meat and makes an excellent roast. In this way each rabbit doe will have produced within a year, at the very lowest estimate, young which will, at maturity, aggregate 100 pounds of meat. In the face of the threatened meat famine, the contribution of even a small portion of this amount by every family easily able to do so, would be a very considerable aid to the nation.

Any back yard with a small boy or girl in possession can have a small corner devoted to this simple means of production and conservation all in one. A space two feet by three feet square to be occupied by the doe with her smallest litter, and an equal floor space (above or below being, perhaps, more convenient,) for each five or six young up to the age of 2 months, is the maximum of room necessary. The care and feeding of the bunnies should prove a delight to all youngsters and can be easily managed by them in a short time each day if the simple rules of cleanliness, right feeling and proper housing are observed.

ON A BACK LOT.

Arthur Upham of No. 120 East Avenue 40 sends in the following record of his flock of unculled White Leghorn pullets, which on the whole is exceptionally favorable. These pullets were hatched April 6, 1917, and laid their first eggs August 24, 1917, or at four months and eighteen days of age. They have experienced good care, but no forcing. In detail the record from September 1 stands as follows:

September—Average number of hens, 25; number eggs per month, 202; number eggs per hen, 8.

October—Average number of hens, 25; number eggs per month, 500; number eggs per hen, 20.

November—Average number of hens, 25; number eggs per month, 505; number eggs per hen, 20⅕.

December—Average number of hens, 24; number eggs per month, 501; number eggs per hen, 20⅞.

January—Average number of hens, 24; number eggs per month, 519; number eggs per hen, 21⅝.

PLAN BIG DRIVE ON JACKRABBITS.

BY HAROLD J. WOOD.

The announcement of the United States Department of Agriculture, through D. A. Gilchrist, who is stationed at Tucson, Ariz., that jackrabbit skins are worth 5 cents apiece puts a bounty on the long-eared meat animal of the desert wastes which will doubtless make him exceedingly wary this year.

In various sections of the Southwest farmers are planning to reduce the number of jack rabbits and thereby save a greater proportion of their crops this summer and fall. They purpose to save what the jack rabbit has been destroying.

Farm bureaus and organizations of ranchers are planning jack rabbit drives. In some places arrangements are being made to have jackrabbit roundups next fall and ship all the jacks, alive, to army camps, for food. Many farmer boys are planning to trap the jacks, sell their meat and dispose of the dried skins.

Jack-rabbit meat is quite palatable, especially when ground or hashed and made into tamales. The dried skins sell for 25 cents per pound and it takes about five pelts to make a pound. They should be removed from the body and dried flat. Mr. Gilchrist at Tucson can furnish information relative to selling jack-rabbit pelts, upon application.

FARM NEWS FROM THE BROAD FIELD. IN PARAGRAPHS.

PHOENIX (Ariz.)—One of the sections of the Salt River Valley, Arizona, that is doing its "bit" in production is Marinette, between the New and Agua Fria rivers. Already there is being prepared 2700 acres for cotton, 1400 acres for milo maize, 350 acres for alfalfa and 400 acres of grain in this district. These operations are divided between the several owners and many lessees. Schader & Montgomery are farming 800 acres of cotton, and they have leased a large acreage to others. R. P. Davie is farming on his own account over 1000, and has closed many leases to growers from California and elsewhere. Indications are that the entire 10,000 acres in the Marinette canal irrigation district will be in crop before the end of the year.

VAN NUYS—Although the San Fernando Valley is probably better situated as respects irrigation facilities than almost any other district in the State, the rains of the past week were none the less welcome. The orchards will be greatly benefited and beet and bean growers are assured of moisture to give their crops a good start. The whole valley is cleaner and greener for the showers.

HEBER—Probably the largest check ever paid an Imperial Valley rancher for a carload of milo maize was recently handed E. J. M. Hale of this city by A. C. Rath, grain buyer. The check was for $3172.32. The car was loaded, according to the Railroad Administration's requirements, to the eaves, and 99,135 pounds rolled out of this city in one car. The "corn" brought $64 per ton, the top price for milo in this section.

SEELEY—The first Egyptian long staple cotton gin to be installed in Imperial Valley will commence work here next week, it was announced by officers of the Seeley Long Staple Gin Company, which has financed the erection of a modern roller gin in this city. Manager M. P. Pearce states that a large quantity of the Yuma and Pima cotton is waiting to be ginned.

TULARE—With a price of 60 cents per pound for butter fat, the total payments to dairymen of this district by the Dairymen's Co-operative Creamery for the month of January broke all previous records. The total for the month to the members was $69,000 for 351,000 pounds of cream.

OXNARD—The sugar beet seed that was planted before the rain has come up and is growing rapidly. Thinning the beets will begin within a very few days.

REDLANDS—Local orange shippers have received during the past few days disquieting reports from buyers in the East, showing that a few of the cars of oranges sent from Southern California have not reached the market in good shape. Decay has been the trouble and local shippers believe it is due to the mature condition of the fruit, for it is as mature now as it usually is in March or April. So far the decay has been only a small per cent. and in most cases in cars that have been on the road for a considerable length of time. The railroads are not able to rush the fruit through as has been the custom and it is believed this is causing most of the trouble.

ORANGE—At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Richland Walnut Growers Association, reports showed that the association growers have received $126,409 for their 1917 crop. The output for the year was 840,842 pounds received at the packing house, 845,966 pounds being sold, there being a gain of 5154 pounds due to bleaching.

IMPERIAL—The first crate of asparagus to be shipped in the West was sent forward to Chicago this week by John J. Keith, buyer for a large Chicago provision house, from the Manoogian acreage. The crate will be followed by express shipments of a few crates a day until about March 5, when the first car of asparagus will go forward. The asparagus is late this year, but the crop is bountiful and of excellent quality. The first crate of asparagus brought $20. Growers and acreage this year follow: Peck and Williams, 130 acres; R. D. McPherrin, forty acres; Manoogian farm, forty acres; Clarence Conard, twenty-five acres; George C. Petterman, thirty acres; Weber and Wetzel, ten acres; L. E. Cooley, eight acres, and sixty additional acres divided into smaller tracts.

INDIO—Prof. S. C. Mason of the United States Department of Agriculture, recently gave an illustrated lecture on Egyptian dates to a very appreciative audience in the Coachella Valley High School auditorium. Prof. Mason has traveled extensively through the date teritory of Egypt, and has made an exhaustive study of the industry. Stereopticon views have shown trees fifty feet high, loaded with dates, and the fact was brought out that the tree is extensively useful aside from the value of the fruit. The trunk is used for heavy timber, the leaf stems for crates of every description, the fibre of the pinnae for strong baskets, sacks, binding cord, ropes and even hawsers. The prediction was made that in time all the many thousands of onion crates annually shipped into the Coachella Valley will be replaced by crates made of the date palm leaves that art regularly pruned from the trees. A prophetic portrayal of the beauty of the valley, when the large number of date trees now planted will have reached the dimensions of those of the older countries, was of great interest and gave many pioneers a just feeling of pride in anticipation.

WATTS.—That cotton can be successfully grown in California outside of Imperial Valley has been lately demonstrated here. Mrs. J. Bullinger of this place, planted two twenty-five-foot rows of Imperial Valley seed last spring in her back yard and in October harvested enough of the cotton to make two large comforters. The stalks grew to six feet in height and the fluffy contents of the bursted ball may yet be seen on some of them. An expert cotton grower, J. F. Brannon of Georgia, was greatly interested in the specimens and declared them to be of an exceedingly fine texture. Even better results of this experiment might have been realized had the plants received more water, being infrequently irrigated owing to the absence of Mrs. Bullinger from home during much of their growth.

Food Production.

mightiest to help to produce food both for man and beast, we will be protecting ourselves against want and serving our country and the civilized world.

It has been said that there are four steps through which a nation goes in prosecuting a great war to successful conclusion. It first exhorts its citizens to do their full duty; it next admonishes, then it entreats, and finally it compels. May the first step be all that is necessary in the United States.

THE VALUE OF A COMPOST HEAP.

BY LILLIAN C. FORD.

To make the home garden successful more or less fertilizer is necessary. One way to obtain it without cost is to make a compost heap. To do this gather up the fallen leaves, grass cuttings, corn stalks cut in small pieces, green weeds, roots and vines of peas and beans and other vegetation, and pile them in a compact heap, mixing with them a wheelbarrow load of poultry droppings or other manure. Keep it moist, fork it over occasionally, and add from time to time other decaying vegetation. Fermentation and decomposition are thus effected, with the result that before long a supply of excellent fertilizer is available. While it is well to start such a pile in the fall by dampening and working it over often the time taken to thoroughly decompose it is greatly shortened, so that one started now will be available in May or June.

Compost is excellent for use in seed beds, for starting young plants, for melon and cucumber hills, and for top dressing for almost any garden crop. Worked into the row at planting time, it will hasten the growth of the plants and add to the yield.

Another method of obtaining fertilizer at little cost is to plant cow peas, soy beans, vetch or other legumes on any part of the garden that is not in use and spade them under when a good growth has been made, which may be within six weeks of planting. Legumes add both nitrogen and humus to the soil, having the ability unique among plants of taking the nitrogen from the air and through the action of bacteria depositing it in the soil. The inoculation of the seeds of legumes with especially prepared nitrogen-fixing bacteria, obtainable from any seedman, is highly recommended as a means of increasing the nitrogen in the soil.

If every family in the country with a back yard to grow things in and every farmer, large and small, would produce what they have it in their power to produce, the food problem would be settled in short order.

There was never a time when it was so important for the farmer to set aside an acre for a family vegetable garden. The city man with his back yard isn't the only one who needs to be reminded about that garden.

GIANT FARM POWDERS
STUMPING — AGRICULTURAL

Western soils, stumps and climate need western explosives. That's why Giant Farm Powders cut the cost of clearing western land. Manufactured for more than half a century especially for the West, they naturally give better results on western farms and orchards.

Giant Farm Powders lead in economy because they go further than ordinary explosives. They break up the stumps thoroughly thereby cutting down labor cost. Money and trouble are saved because of their low freezing qualities.

Warning: If your work is done with any other powder or dynamites, the chances are it will not be done as well as with either of the two Giant brands: Eureka Stumping or Giant Stumping. Look for the Giant trade-mark on every case, and be sure of the genuine,

How to make the farm pay more money is explained in "Better Farming." This big free book, fully illustrated, will be sent you as soon as we receive this coupon.

How the Youngest English Breed has Arrived.

A GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIVE SPEAKS. BY HENRY W. KRUCKEBERG.

OF THE English classes of poultry the Dorking is the oldest and the Orpington the youngest. When it comes to popularity and numerical strength, in both England and America, the youngest has the oldest beaten by about a mile. Not only has it the Dorking traveling in the dust, but it has also distanced the Sussex, Redcap, Scotch Grey and Cornish fowl. And, as they say of a quite celebrated food product, "There's a reason."

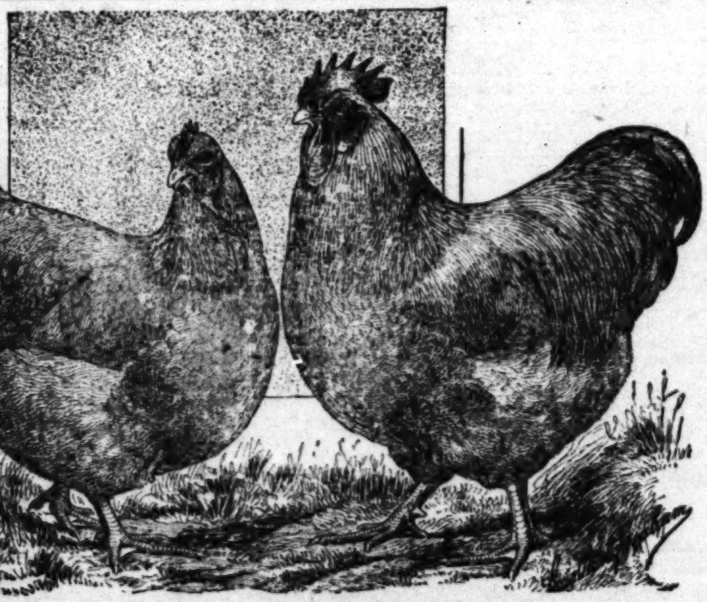
The Orpington fowl possesses economic values in a superlative degree, while at the same time it is a great favorite as a fancier's breed. It is classed as a general purpose fowl, though of late years our Australian friends have developed laying strains of Orpingtons (notably the Blacks) that are giving the Leghorn people something to think about, while in this country the Whites and Buffs have also given a good account of themselves. Allowing for the fact that Orpingtons are large birds with good frame and a carcass that is of some consequence, this is quite remarkable. Of the English breeds, they are the popular favorites in California, and really have a following that ranks with the Plymouth Rocks and Rhode Island Reds. All of which goes to prove that the breed has really arrived and has come to stay.

Unlike some of the other breeds of poultry, the origin of each variety of the Orpington is quite distinct unto itself. Thus, the Blacks, as foundation blood, are presumed to represent Black Minorca, Black Plymouth Rock, and clean-legged Langshan. The Buffs commingle the blood of Golden Hamburg, Buff Cochin and Dark Dorking, and the Whites are said to represent White Dorking and White Leghorn, though the chances are they come from a sport of the Blacks. The Blacks were first heard of in 1886, the Buffs and Whites a few years later. Just at this moment history does not appeal overstrong, therefore, let us view the breed from an economic standpoint.

As a producer of hen fruit and a good table fowl the Orpington occupies a foremost position in the poultry industry wherever the English language prevails. Though English in type, make-up and origin, it is one of the most popular breeds on American farms. It is a big, bulky fowl; hardy and of reasonably quick development. It carries a goodly amount of white flesh, of good grain and fine flavor. The Orpington fattens quite well, and, when properly handled, presents a carcass that fills the eye and provides a morsel for a family dinner that is really some feed. The hens are good layers, being rated as producers during the fall and winter. As already remarked, in some of the Australian egg-laying contests Orpington hens have made some splendid records, viz., from 225 to 307 eggs in twelve months. At Bendigo the government contest reported two Black Orpington hens with 250 eggs each to their credit in 278 days, while some twelve others ranged from 190 and upwards during the same period. Nothing could be finer. The Buffs and Whites in this contest were only a trifle below these figures.

Like all of the heavier breeds, the Orpington stands confinement quite well; the only precaution is to keep the birds active. Exercise they must have if limited to rather small quarters. All Orpingtons are good setters and mothers.

The color scheme of the three varieties here mentioned is designated by the name. The Blacks have a greenish-black plumage with a bright sheen; beak black, also legs and feet; eye, black with brown iris; comb, wattles, face and earlobes, red; comb, single and of medium size. In Buffs the shade varies from lemon to deep buff; the beak is horn color; eye, red or brown; comb, wattles, face and earlobes, red; legs of a pinkish white color. Whites are the same as Buffs except for white plumage and beak. In addition to these are the Jubilee Orpington with color markings much like the Speckled Sussex, and the Blue Orpington with a plumage much like that of the Blue Andalusian. Both are bred rather sparingly—now and then species are seen in our poultry shows. Weights for all varieties of Orpingtons are: Males, 8½ to 10 pounds; females, 7 to 8.



A pair of single comb Buff Orpingtons.

The Federal Campaign.

Poultry readers of the Farm and Tractor Section will be interested to know that the Department of Agriculture at Washington has stationed Arthur A. Peters in Los Angeles as district representative in the government's poultry campaign. Mr. Peters is not new to the poultry industry, having for some years been the first vice-president of the American Poultry Association, and is withal a fancier and breeder of wide experience and observation. He has already come into close touch with the poultry situation in the Southwest, and will undoubtedly be much in evidence from now on. With a view of making his mission clear to the great army of our poultry readers, Mr. Peters has kindly furnished the following brief outline of what the Agricultural Department has in view as a means of increasing the production of eggs and table fowl:

"As district representative of the Department of Agriculture—covering the Pacific Coast States a few timely suggestions may be pertinent just at this time. As we all know, it has been found imperative that the American people increase their food production in order to supply not only home demands and our armies, but our associates in the world war and the Allied populations in Europe. Poultry is an important factor in the problem, and one which can be put in operation without any great investment.

"First, our people should produce poultry products to the extent of their opportunities because it is an economic and patriotic duty. A city or suburban dweller can have a back yard poultry plant with at least two hens to each member of the family to supply the table with poultry products and allow egg preservation for winter use, all of which works in nicely with the war garden, furnishing green foods in connection with table scraps, thus supplying much of the ration with a limited allowance of grain.

"Second, upon the grain and fruit farms a hundred or two hens should be kept as a by-product which will afford good returns, as the hens gather much of their support from what would otherwise go to waste. Such flocks can be cared for without additional help, and may often be entrusted to the women folks and children. In this way the government hopes to realize its slogan, 'A hundred hens upon every farm and a hundred eggs to every hen.'

"Third, the California commercial egg farms will have our consideration and with this feature it is anticipated that the size of the flock will depend upon conditions of markets, grain prices, etc., as we find in many cases eggs and meat production sontitute the sole income; hence the government instructs its representatives to in every manner possible, work and co-operative towards obtaining maximum production in this field, and to tender special aid where needed, thereby working for better conditions and profits in production. Our men, our time, and such knowledge as we possess is placed at the disposal of the industry and the bulletins of all features of poultry and egg production will be mailed on request from the Bureau of Animal Industry, Washington, D. C., or California Agricultural College, Berkeley, Cal."

Those who may want to confer with Mr. Peters personally, can do so at his office, room 504 Federal Building, Los Angeles.

Market Conditions.

The war has greatly affected the poultry industry, not only locally, but throughout the country. It has negatived the profits in all poultry products, and in cases a real hardship has followed. As an instance, take the demand for guinea fowls. At this season of the year their flesh is usually in demand at comparatively high prices for banquets and high-grade hotel trade. Their dark flesh and gamey flavor have made them acceptable substitutes for wild birds. But since the war banquets and similar opportunities for lavish expenditure are in disfavor.

W. F. Priebe, poultry specialist of the United States Food Administration staff, states that owners of storage stocks of guinea fowls are offering them at comparatively low prices, and now is a timely opportunity for the public to use guinea fowl for variety on the table and to conserve red meats. Every indication seems to show that there will be a good demand for all of the standard varieties of poultry. A reduction in "red meat" consumption should assure a continuance of this market at profitable figures. The general trend toward more economical living, however, will have its effect on the demand for fancy fowl, such as guineas and pheasants.

Why Not Turkeys?

In the light of increased food production and conservation we can see some hope for turkey culture on the grain ranches of California, where much of the living of the birds can be gleaned on the stubble fields after harvesting, and where alfalfa range is also available. It is somewhat surprising to learn from the census of 1910 that only 13.7 per cent. of the total number of farms reported any turkeys at all, and on those farms reporting turkeys, an average of but slightly over four breeding turkeys was found per farm. There are ranches which by the nature of the crops grown on them, or because of unfavorable surroundings, are not adapted to turkey raising, but most ranches could easily handle a breeding flock of from ten to fifteen hen turkeys and a tom, raising a goodly number of turkeys each year at a profit. Good prices were paid to the turkey raiser during the past marketing season. On December 15, 1917, the average price per pound live weight paid to the farmer was 30.5 cents in New York State; 23.7 cents in Illinois; 25 cents in Georgia; 19.3 cents in Texas, and 27.1 cents in California. The average price throughout the United States was 23 cents.

In a plea for a larger turkey culture, the Federal Department of Agriculture calls attention to the fact that the turkey is a farm bird, suited to the grain and stock farms where there is ample ranging ground abounding in such turkey food as grasshoppers and other insects, weed seeds, waste grain, such as is left in the fields after harvesting. On such ranches the present prices of grain affect the turkey-raiser but little, for with the exception of what is used at fattening time, the feed consumed is largely of such a kind as would otherwise go to waste.

Conserving the Hens.

Industrially, the country is experiencing some radical shifting of values, and in no direction more so than in the poultry industry, hence it is barely possible that the order of the Federal Food Administration forbidding the slaughtering of hens and pullets (for the period expiring April 30,) has come none too soon; for certain it is that there has been a considerable reduction in laying hens during the period of the war. It is said that under normal conditions we as a nation produce about 100,000,000 crates of hen fruit per year, and that since the war began this has been reduced approximately one-half. If we study the law of supply and demand, we soon learn that the demand for grains sent prices skywards, with the result that it was diverted from its normal use as poultry food and that the owners of fowl sold their flocks for what they would bring at the butcher's. This process has now been going on for about two years, fully 500,000 head going to market from Sonoma county alone. And feed still rules high, and the average poultryman is far from secure in his operations. The hatcheries are not going full capacity, as the demand for their goods is not heavy. Until economic changes take place, we can see little inducement for the poultrymen to increase production.

Obviously, to increase production, it must be made profitable, or at any rate, yield a living to the poultry farmer. Otherwise, he will be forced to expend his energies in other directions where a living is more assured. There is already an alarming shortage in poultry and poultry products in this country, but until economic conditions again become normal we can see no great inducement for an increase of poultry productions. Conserving the hens will help some, but no greater activity will follow unless the industry shall prove at least self-sustaining.

The order governing the sale of poultry here alluded to reads as follows: "The licensee shall not between February 11, 1918, and April 30, 1918, purchase, ship, sell or negotiate the sale of any live or freshly-killed hens or pullets for food. Provided, however, that this shall not prevent the purchase, shipment or sale between February 11 and February 23, 1918, of hens or pullets which were either killed or shipped prior to February 11, 1918, to markets for sale as food. Provided, further, that nothing in this rule shall prevent the purchase, shipment or sale of live hens or pullets for production purposes. Effective February 11, 1918."

SEEK TO ENFORCE PEST QUARANTINE.

That the experience of the Southern States with cotton pests has been a strong object lesson to growers in Imperial Valley was shown lately when nearly 100 cotton farmers of that region met at Holtville and drew up resolutions asking the State Commissioner of Horticulture to provide a special inspector whose business it should be to see that all quarantine regulations relating to the importation of cottonseed into the valley shall be rigidly inforced. The resolution follows:

"We, the members of the cotton section of the third agricultural assembly of Imperial county, recognizing the fact that in the State of California we have now one of the very few areas left in the world admirably adapted to the production of cotton which is at the same time clean and free of the cotton boll weevil and the pink boll worm of cotton, and that there exists a danger of the introduction of these insects in cottonseed brought into the State from infested areas, we therefore recommend to the members of this assembly that the following resolution be indorsed:

"We, the cotton growers of Imperial Valley, urgently request the State Commissioner of Horticulture to provide a State horticultural quarantine inspector for the special purpose of putting into execution all quarantine regulations concerned with the importing or bringing in of cottonseed at all points of entry within Imperial and Riverside counties."

FISH MEAL AS FEED.

Fish meal, a by-product of the fish cannery, when used in a ration for milk production proved to be worth from 20 to 25 per cent. more than cottonseed meal and had no ill effect upon the flavor of milk, says the annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture. Potato silage was found to be as palatable as corn silage and of equal feeding value; peanut meal from unhulled nuts was inferior to cottonseed meal, and 128 pounds of potato meal equaled 100 of corn meal as a feed for dairy cows, according to experiments conducted by the bureau.

In some of the best handled tenant farms in England it has been estimated that the net profit is distributed about 41 per cent. to the farmer, 39 per cent. to the labor 20 per cent. for the landlord. The net is obtained after deducting all ordinary expenses.

PREPARATION AND IRRIGATION OF LAND. BY THOS. C. WALLACE.

WHEN we were talking about rain last week someone in the back seats chimed in with, "But we are nearly all irrigators." Yes, of course, that is true, and it is from the standpoint of irrigation that we are mostly interested in the water supply and its use. It seems right to explain, however, that the conservation of the rainfall by the dry-land farmers and the irrigators is after all but a branch of irrigation and the irrigator who thinks that the conservation of the rain in his soil is of no importance because he is going to irrigate from flume, or pipe or cistern, has yet the A.B.C. of his work to learn.

First, we should recognize that rain water has been shown and proved an important fertilizer. The proofs of this were laboriously obtained by experimentors who grew plants successfully with rain water in carefully-washed sand and in hard coal ashes. The Moors, who were the best irrigators of whom we have history, proved that by careful manipulation fruits could be produced in shifting sands with rain water. Rain usually falls in dull weather when evaporation is low and as a result sinks well into the soil wherever the conditions are favorable, as in a plowed or cultivated field and a light porous soil. Rains during the winter and early spring season provide the deep water necessary for the encouraging of deep rootage by the plant and for nourishing the plant while making root. If we do not get these timely rains, we must depend upon water brought from surrounding mountains, either by irrigation works or through the soil layers which incline to our district. We have no reason to expect success in our crops if we do not get a supply of water down under our land several feet.

It is not easy to do this entirely by irrigation, but it can be done. The difficulty we encounter is in the varying soil layers which check the downward flow, the lateral seepage and the capillarity. A layer of sand a foot or two below a clay soil will not receive any water from the clay until the clay is oversaturated, while at the same time the clay distributes the soil laterally very slowly. Thus the slow drainage of this clay stratum makes irrigation slow and irksome, and it is even difficult for us to follow the water movements in the soil so as to judge if we have obtained a thorough seepage. Reverse this process, and while the irrigation water quickly goes through a top sand layer, it is arrested by the clay, which takes water more slowly. The water takes too active a lateral movement and if the clay stratum is on an incline, the water may be carried off by subdrainage; and again we have failed in our purpose. This may occur as well with the rain, but it does not then entail the cost in time, labor and fluid measurement.

But another point, too often lost sight of, confronts us. Our irrigation is applied in fine weather beneath clear skies when evaporation is so high that we lose from 30 to 50 per cent. of our irrigation by its being carried off in the air. In common practice our best methods record a loss of 30 per cent. and, as usually carried on, a loss of 50 per cent. and over takes place. Whether our soils are supplied deeply with water either from rains or irrigation, is the very first principle of irrigation to observe. The tendency of the water in the soils being upward (unless they are underlaid with loose gravel strata, in which case drainage may be severe at the gravel depth,) we are interested to know what is likely to take place. While water rises more surely in clay or loam than in sand, it rises more slowly. A clay or a loam will draw water up from a sand more rapidly than a sand will raise it from a clay. The most reliable figure I have seen worked out from experiments shows that clay will lift water from sand five times faster than sand will from clay, and that a good loam will do the same on a basis of four to one.

Importance of Irrigation.

Before reviewing the processes of irrigation as practiced, a word about water and its relations to the soil and the crops may be of value in impressing its importance. This is suggested by the calls of ranchers for fertilization where intelligent examinations have shown that the real trouble has lain in the water table. Among the peculiarities of water are its relations to heat and its action in capillaries or hair tubes. Water rises higher in soils and plants than any other fluid and its rising shows a convex or up-rounding shape as against the concave or saucer shape that shows at the tops of the columns of other rising fluids. This is why water rises so surely in the soil, which action we call capillarity. It is this rising faculty of water that makes possible the great height of trees. Temperature changes more slowly in water than in any other fluid. It takes more heat to increase the temperature of water than of any other substance. The value of this is that the water in the soil does not get hot like the dry sand and clay, but, if mixed with them, keeps them cool. At the same time it holds an even temperature in the soil. The water in the plant prevents its being burnt up by the hot sun and if the plant has as full saturation as it can accommodate, there is very little danger of harm in a hot spell. This saturation runs from 60 to 95 per cent. of the actual plant weight. In the succulent fruits and the cucumbers, melons, lettuce, asparagus, etc., 90 to 95 per cent. is the saturation point. In the ordinary vegetables of field and garden 90 per cent. is found. Grasses can absorb 80 to 85 per cent. water, grains 75 per cent. and the mature branches and leaves of forest trees 60 per cent. Water is the grand universal solvent and it alone expands as it cools, as observe in the formation of ice. The clay soils shrink as the water dries out of them. When rewet, some clays crumble and some get plastic and sticky, and we should obtain a correct knowledge of this in any clays we are farming, as it will be a guide to our handling them under irrigation.

Using Water.

Taking the grain crops generally, we can count on their using practically all their water within a four-foot depth, and many of the grasses can thrive on two or three feet of moisture depth. Alfalfa alone among the hay crops needs deep water and a supply of seven to ten feet should be aimed at. All the other legume crops, like the beans and peas, can do well with four feet of moisture, but five feet is safer, as they have considerable leaf, stalk and pod to care for, as well as their seed. The best irrigation and the most economical is that given steadily and throughout the season in comparatively small irrigations. Presupposing that there is, either from rains or applied irrigation, a good subsoil supply at a suitable depth and a surface full-plow-depth loam, with a soil stratification below that will allow of good average capillarity, a method whereby, after the plants are up one inch weekly can be applied throughout an ordinary season of twelve or thirteen growing weeks, will take care of about any field or garden crop.

While many growers do not seem to have any real method there has been a rule among potato growers something like this: The potato growth has been divided into four periods. First, when the plants are four inches high. Second, when the tubers are beginning to form. Third, in full bloom. Fourth, when nearly ripe. The plan with this has been to apply two or three inches at the first period, three or four inches at the second period, four or five inches at the third period and two to six or even seven inches, at the last irrigation, or fourth period. A careful test of these and other methods gave the best result from one inch applied weekly during the growing season, or a little over one acre-foot. A similar periodic plan has been observed by many beet growers, but when all the methods and want of methods were fully tested, it was found that one inch a week, or about thirteen inches a season has proven the best plan always, of course, provided the sub-irrigation was first made good as described. The variation from these standards should have careful thought. The conditions of the soil, the climatic peculiarities and the water service will always influence the result, and to some extent control the practical methods, but the aim should be to not only produce the best crops, but to conserve the water supply of the land.

It is about impossible to lay down much of a rule for alfalfa irrigation, but there are some essentials worth discussion. In new alfalfa fields the crucial time is during the first six weeks or two months, but it generally is fatal to irrigate the field until it is well grown up. The cause of this is that there is too much encouragement for surface rooting at a time when the deep roots should be established. If you are not sure that the rains have soaked the land deeply, it is best to open some deep ditches in the field and send down a good irrigation to ensure sub-soil water. While the common plan of alfalfa irrigation is by simply flooding the land in such sized squares or plats as the flow of water will permit, there is a much better plan which economizes in water use and keeps a healthy field. This is to use the lay-off, which makes press-furrows below the surface so as not to throw up any ridges. These furrows are usually about three feet apart and when cleaned out with the lay-off after each cutting are nearly six inches deep and about the same width. By running the water in these furrows it is sent deeper into the soil than by flooding and the great loss by evaporation of flooding is reduced to the minimum. Flooding for irrigation in any class of cropping entails a loss of fully 50 per cent. of the water used and as a result it needs constant repeating. This is because the great evaporation so quickly dries the surface soil that rapid capillary sets in from below and a still greater loss of water occurs, the water being brought to the surface before it has a chance to sink deeply.

The furrow method of irrigation is the most rational and economical both as a water and labor saver, when both these items are considered. The deeper the furrows, the better the irrigation and the greater the economy. The old ditch system, by which deep ditches are opened twelve to twenty-five feet apart, is only useful in preparing land when we know that the sub-soil has not a sufficient supply, but such a plan is not suited to continuous summer irrigation. The basin system is only suited to trees and should only be used in the winter or spring, the only object being to send water down to the deep roots by taking advantage of their reaching from the trunk downward. For summer irrigation the basin plan is bad for the trees and has nothing to recommend it for any other crops.

The most wasteful system yet devised is the sprinkling method. It really is not properly irrigation, as apart from the loss by run-off, there is a great loss from evaporation. Some people have been pleased with it in orchard work because it keeps the trees clean and washes off young scale and insects and that is really the only point in favor of it as clean plants have better breathing power and are thereby benefited. But an occasional sprinkling seems all that is necessary for such cleaning and depending on sprinklers for general irrigation is too wasteful.

The most economical method is undoubtedly the use of underground pipes, but this is such an expensive operation to install that most growers are unwilling to adopt it. To install such a system so that it will be permanent and dependable requires a great deal of detail, as consideration must be given to the density of the soil around the outlets. Only clear water can be used in an underground pipe system. If the water is dirty the silt is almost sure in time, to clog, either the joints of the pipe, the elbows or the outlets. Irrigation hardpans are formed by flooding and basin irrigating, owing to the very fine silt of the soils being carried a little deeper into the soil and clogging the capillaries. Thus a silty clay above a sand may even form a hardpan in the sand, or the clay stratum itself may become more concentrated and form hardpan. This is merely the mechanical process of forming hardpans, but as well there may follow chemical processes which solidify the hardpan so that it is almost stone. These irrigation hardpans form but a short distance under the surface, usually not more than eight or nine inches, and they can be broken up with the sub-soil plow, or indeed an occasional deep plowing will prevent their becoming very obstructive to water seepage. If they are not attended to they will not only obstruct the root systems of the plants but will allow a souring of the soil above them, and perhaps form chemical combinations that could only be broken by blasting.

Preparing the Land.

Before undertaking to prepare the land for irrigation it is quite worth while to take a good post-hole auger with two or three extra joints of pipe to lengthen the staff so that we can make good boring depths with it. A "V"-shaped gutter about ten feet long should accompany us in our work of boring. Starting from the highest elevation of the land, we should test the stratification, following the highest contour line, putting down the test holes at such intervals as we judge necessary. If we find much change in the charac-

Increase Your Yield of Farm Products With GYPSITE (Decomposed Gypsum)

Read what the eminent Dr. R. R. Snowden, the California soil expert, says of GYPSITE:

White Star Plaster Co.,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen: As regards the agricultural value of GYPSITE, I will say that it possesses especial value for use as a fertilizer, because of its very favorable mechanical condition. It is so fine in texture that it quickly begins its work after coming in contact with the soil moisture. As a matter of fact, water will dissolve but about a quarter of one per cent of its weight of any kind of gypsum, but in the case of a finely divided gypsum, such as this is, this strength of solution is more nearly approached than in a coarsely ground material of the same kind. ON THIS ACCOUNT I CONSIDER THIS THE BEST NATURAL GYPSUM FOR AGRICULTURAL USE THAT I HAVE EVER SEEN.

Respectfully, (Signed) R. R. Snowden, Agricultural Chemist.

Where sulphur or lime-sulphate is deficient in your soil, GYPSITE will prevent dropping of fruit and will greatly increase your yield. We will gladly furnish further information upon request. Call or write.

WAR-TIME DEMANDS ADD TO POPULARITY OF BACON HOGS.

BY LILLIAN C. FORD.

WITH the increased demand for bacon, which plays an important part in army rations, and which is needed for export, the bacon type of hog is attracting more attention than ever before. In California, the lard hog has always been in the lead, though barley and alfalfa, produced so abundantly in this State, are pre-eminently suited as feed to be converted into bacon. There are, however, in this State no inconsiderable number of hog raisers who have long pinned their faith to the Tamworths and the Yorkshires, which are the two distinct types of bacon hogs.

The bacon type of hog has been bred for length rather than for breadth of body. They are longer in body and leg, with comparatively narrow back, and lighter shoulder and neck than the lard hog. The hams are smooth and taper towards the hock, while the side is both long and deep. They are heavy hogs, weighing when mature from 500 to 700 pounds, under ordinary conditions. The two standard types of bacon breeds are the Tamworth and the large Yorkshires, both of English origin.

The Tamworth is of ancient lineage, though it was at first so crossed with various breeds as to have a clouded escutcheon. It takes its name from Tamworth, a town in Staffordshire, where it first became a distinct type, though it later spread to adjoining counties. In its early stages it was a most unprepossessing animal in appearance, with long legs, narrow body, and unduly prominent ears. By a process of selection, probably coupled with cross breeding, the present type was developed some forty years ago, when the breed finally won the recognition it had sought for generations.

Although the bacon type of hog has won slow favor with the rank and file of American breeders, who claim that our markets demand a different type of animal, progressive hog fanciers began importing Tamworths for breeding purposes in the eighties. It was found that, when properly rationed and prepared for market, the demand was not wanting and the returns were quite as good as for other hogs. At the present time, there is a steady demand for well-developed Tamworths, especially in carload lots, at every large market.

LARGE AND RANGY.

In appearance the Tamworth conforms to the prescribed bacon type. It is a large, rangy-looking animal, strong of bone, long of body, and leggy in appearance, especially when compared with the short, thick, fine-boned lard hog. A mature boar should weight 600 pounds, with the sow about 100 pounds lighter, though much larger specimens are produced. In the color the demand is for "golden-red hair on a flesh-colored skin, free from black," though the shade of red varies from dull yellow to a dark chestnut. It usually darkens with age, so that an old hog may be dark, dull brown. The snout is long and prominent and is not dished. The large pointed ears are firmly attached to the head. The neck and shoulder are light, the back and loin of medium width, and the side long, but only moderately deep. The ham is poorly developed, though some breeders have overcome this. While heavy, fat hams are not considered desirable in a bacon hog, critics of the Tamworth have maintained that too great deficiency in this respect is bad.

While many admirers of this breed of swine declare it to be highly satisfactory as a general-purpose hog, it is as a producer of a large amount of the finest quality of bacon that it has won its reputation. Instead of turning a large proportion of its feed into fat, as do most other hogs, the Tamworth has a tendency to produce a goodly proportion of lean, which makes the bacon of that most desirable kind—with alternating strips of fat and lean. The curer of bacon demands a large hog, with a comparatively small proportion of fat. Such a hog takes longer to mature than one having a fat carcass weighing from 200 to 300 pounds. The Tamworth at market age weighs fully twice as much as the average large hog does when it goes to market; consequently, it takes longer to mature, but no longer than other hogs marketed for bacon.

As a converter of feed into pork the Tamworth is claimed by those who knows its merits to be as economical a medium as any. It is not as well adapted to an exclusive corn ration as are various types of lard hogs, but gives an excellent account of every pound of alfalfa, silage, milo, rolled barley and roughage that it consumes. The sows are prolific and the infant mortality among Tamworths is notably low.

In California many breeders favor this hog. It is especially popular in Imperial Valley, where the feed best adapted to its development is produced at the least expense. It has been the experience of Tamworth breeders of the valley that they can always depend upon a good demand for their product at prices that make the industry a paying one.

THE LARGE YORKSHIRE.

The large Yorkshire, commonly called the Yorkshire, is also of English origin, being derived from a large white hog described as possessing enormous drooping ears, like a water spaniel, and wattles hanging from each side of the throat. A long process of cross-breeding developed the present type of Yorkshires. The first crossing was with the white Leicester, a white hog of finer bone and more susceptibility to putting on fat than the original Yorkshires. Another crossing was with a breed known as the Small White or the Small Yorkshires, a small, fine-boned, easily fattened hog long popular in Yorkshire, Eng. Thus the size of the large Yorkshire was reduced from 1000 pounds to 600 or 700 pounds, the type refined, and the quality of the pork improved. Selection as well as cross-breeding had an important part in this development.

In the United States large Yorkshires have been bred somewhat extensively during the past quarter of a century, especially in the Northern States. There are more Yorkshire hogs in Canada than those of any other breed. This is due to the fact that Canada has long catered to the English market, with its demand for bacon of the first quality.

The large Yorkshire is one of the largest breeds of swine, the boars commonly weighing 700 pounds or over. It is white in color, though black or blue spots on the skin do not disqualify it from registry. Black hairs are very objectionable. In the standard promulgated by the American Yorkshire Club certain points are emphasized. The body is long, deep and of medium breadth, equally wide at shoulders, side and hams; the top line is slightly arched and the underline straight. The back is fairly broad, equally wide at shoulders, side and hams and is of even width from end to end; the short ribs are of good length. The shoulders are large, but not massive, the sides long, deep and straight and even from shoulder to shoulder; the ribs well-arched and deep; the hindquarters deep, with gradual droop; the hams are large with very little surface fat. As a bacon type of hog it is highly satisfactory, maturing as quickly as any animal bred for this purpose. For the production of a 200-pound carcass in a few months it is not as desirable as are the breeds of lard hogs. Like the Tamworth, the Yorkshire gives the best results when fed on a mixed ration in which alfalfa, rolled barley, milo and roughage predominate. This is why it is not popular in the corn belt, where lard rather than bacon is the desideratum.

In California Yorkshires are slowly growing in popularity, with indications that the unprecedented demand for bacon will result in a great extension of this breed. For crossing with smaller breeds of finer bone, such as the Berkshire and the Chester-Whites, it is highly recommended. This crossing with hogs of the lard type increases both the size and the proportion of lean meat of the latter, without detracting from their other qualities as general purpose breeds.

BERKSHIRE MEN MEET AT DAVIS.

BY J. C. KNOLLIN.

"Germany now has more hogs than she had at the beginning of the war. The United States has less."

This startling revelation came from Mr. L. E. Frost, editor of the Berkshire World (Chicago,) in the course of an address before the Western Berkshire Congress at the university farm at Davis, February 21 and 22. Mr. Frost stated that he had just come from the East, where he had been in touch with official and reliable sources of information and that he was certain of the existence of this condition.

The tone of the entire session was patriotic, nearly all of the speakers touching upon the war-time status of the hog, and especially the Berkshire hog. It was urged that renewed and extensive efforts be made to increase the number of hog breeders, and it was pointed out that because of the prolificacy of swine, the "pork route" is the shortest route for immediate increase of our meat production. Ways and means were discussed for increasing the popularity of hog raising, and it was agreed that not the least of these is the Boys' and Girls' Pig Club, an institution which has already proved very productive of results all over the United States.

The meeting was one of the most successful in the history of such gatherings in the West. The speakers at the banquet which closed the first day's programme, included, besides Mr. Frost, A. J. Lovejoy of Roscoe, Ill., sometimes known as the "Dean of the Berkshire Breeders;" Eugene Grubb of Colorado, potato authority and cattleman; Dean H. E. Van Norman of the university farm school; Prof. Gordon H. True of the university farm; William Carruthers of Mayfield; A. B. Humphrey of Escalon; Frank B. Anderson of Sacrameto; Howard Houston of Davis; Robert E. Jones of Sacramento, editor country life department, Sacramento Bee; A. L. Thatcher of Los Angeles; A. B. Humphrey of Escalon; Homer Hewins of Calistoga and Frank Steele of Grants Pass, Ore., retiring president of the congress.

At the first days session, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, William [illegible], vice-president, A. B. Humphrey, and secretary-treasurer, Homer Hewins, Calistoga.

The sale, which was one of the features of the congress, was in charge of Col. W. S. Hoard, as auctioneer, with Mr. Frost in the ring as sale manager. Fully 300 persons were present in spite of the bad weather. The fifty animals were disposed of before 5 o'clock, and brought an average price of $159 a head. While no startling records were made, the promoters and consignors were well satisfied with the prices, especially when it was considered that the feed situation is very serious, and that farmers or breeders are [illegible] their stock at present.

Frank Bush of Santa Rosa was the buyer of the two highest priced animals of the sale, both of which were sows of the famous Silbirfa breeding, consigned by Silver Birch Farm, Newport, Wash., C. M. Talmadge, manager. Silbirfa Bernice 11th brought $400 and Silbirfa Luster 9th, $385.

New Zealand has decided to control the purchase and distribution of its new wheat crop. The maximum government price will be $1.41 per bushel. Latest estimates give the total amount of wheat land as 293,000 acres, and the estimated yield thirty bushels per acre. New Zealand has lately been importing wheat from Australia.

Several promising varieties of chestnuts have been developed by specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture.

HOW PROSPERITY AND POWER FARMING GO HAND-IN-HAND.

BY JAMES A. FARRA.

ONE of the uncontrollable factors of agricultural production is labor. Like climate, seeds and soil qualities, it is uncertain. But basing forecast upon past records, some idea, in normal times, can be formed as to crop and seasonal demand. Arrangements can then be made for the necessary men. This is not so in war time. No one knows whether there will be a supply when needed this year. Of the usual kind there will not be; of other kinds, perhaps.

Women and children, boy organizations, exempted and unfit men, prisoners of war, floating agricultural laborers, properly organized, and labor from our inland possessions, are possible sources of relief. There is, however, another, more logical and lasting way to solve the problem. Let those with brains who like outdoor work use their heads as well as their hands and feet. Increase the production for each individual now employed to the limit of his intelligence. Do not limit each to his, or her, physical strength. Put them in command of unlimited power.

Do not expect the inexperienced and untrained to give full efficiency with hands or hoe. They cannot do it. But put them at the throttle after a few hours of careful instruction and see what results are obtained. The time spent in teaching will be well spent if intelligent labor is employed. Allow skill and brains to control power in big chunks and production will go up with a bound. Home talent is best when it can be had, but "dude" help on a tractor job can do good work, especially where there has been some previous experience with a flivver.

ACROSS THE COUNTRY.

The efficacy of power in agricultural production is forcibly illustrated by a trip across America from the Gulf of Mexico to Puget Sound. Down in the extreme southeast one finds, as a rule, farm power limited among what might be called the natives, to one animal, often an ox. Needless to say, production, even in that favorable climate and light soil, is hardly sufficient for the necessities of life. A little farther north the "one-horse farmer" plows shallow from lack of power and spends his money for plant food which the soil could supply. His northern neighbor in the Ohio and Mississippi valleys uses more power, teams of two or more horses. He plows deeper and lives better.

On up in the corn belt it is nip and tuck between horses and tractor. Northwest of the corn belt is the great wheat country tractors have lifted the heavy burdens from our dumb friends, and teams, if used, are eight and ten-horse.

As you trace this diagonal line across the country, power and business success seem to go hand in hand. Although there are many exceptions to the rule, the path of power as traced will hold fairly true. The exceptions held prove the rule.

War is mechanical, so is agriculture, and the nation which wins will use mechanics most skillfully—the forces of nature guided and controlled by skill. For sometime American manufacturing industries have made full use of concentrated power, growing from little shops to great factories. When will agriculture follow the example? It must be soon.

Already we produce more crops per men employed than any other nation, but it is not enough. We must feed ourselves and help our allies. The only way it can be done is to let those with brains command power.

Orchard and Farm.

ter of each boring it is best to make the tests close, say 100 to 200 feet apart; but if the indications from a few borings are largely identical we are safe to make our contour lines and the hole tests at wider distances.

If the land is but ten or twenty acres a test hole at each corner, about 100 feet inside the line, will generally give us a good reading of the soil. We we lay each boring out in the trough as the lifts are brought out we can easily judge of the chances or possibilities of sinking water into the soil and what the drainage is.

The land must be cleared of all stumps where these exist, and for this purpose the stump puller is supreme. Blasting stimps is a favorite plan with some people, but the labor required after the blast throws the balance of credit to the stump puller, as it not only lifts out the stump, but as well drags the roots along with it. These roots, if simply cut off and left in the ground, interfere with cultivation and irrigation, besides often sending up sprouts that have to be removed. The pulling out of the roots also loosens the ground more effectually than the blasting powder put in the stump.

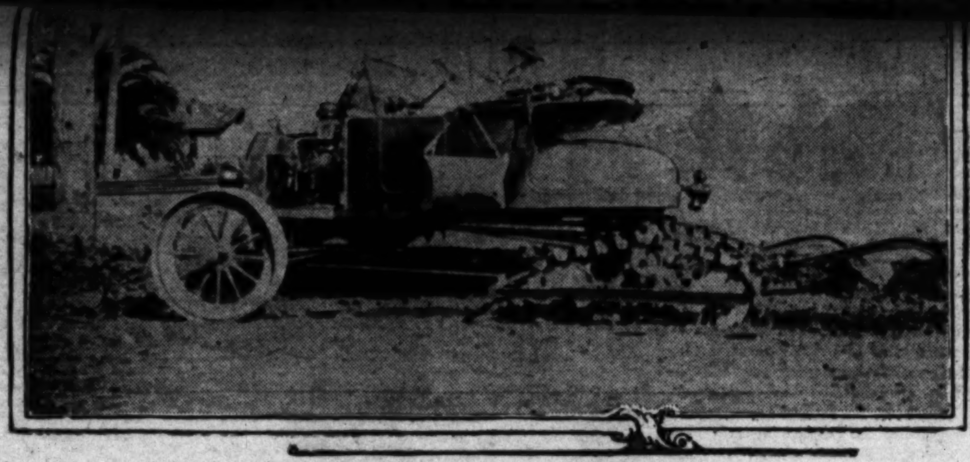
If there are stones on the land large enough to interfere with the plowing and cultivating tools they should be removed, as they are very hard on cultivators and harrows. Removing stones is a hand-labor operation, a drag being required to carry them away. Small stones do not hurt land; in fact, they are an advantage on irrigated land, as they keep the soil open so that the irrigation water can seep well into the subsoil. If they are massed too plentifully, however, they destroy capillarity so that the subwater does not rise as it should to nourish the rootlets among the plant roots.

Land Grading.

The grading of the land, which is done with the shovel graders and grading scrapers, should follow the contour carefully with a view of obtaining the gentlest possible gradients. It is not always possible to grade land all on one slope. In such case the elevations at all changing points should be taken and marked by lath or pole and each piece graded so as to get the gentlest slope from its highest point. Along the highest contour line of the land and of the sections of it we propose to irrigate, a ditch, flume or pipe line should be established, so that the water can be delivered the easiest way to the irrigating furrows. If the land is well and correctly graded the work of establishing irrigation is very easy, but great care should be observed to grade properly. Simply dragging the land over to fill up the hollows with the hillocks is not grading and the inexperienced will do well to look up and make a study of grading machinery before undertaking to prepare land for irrigation.

WEANING THE PIGS.

When pigs are about 5 weeks old, they will begin to taste some of their mother's feed. Do not be in a hurry to wean them. Eight weeks is young enough to wean them, if there is skim milk for them. Of course, the size and development has a great deal to do with their weaning age. If skim milk is not obtainable, it is better to let the pigs nurse the sow until 10 weeks old. Skim milk and corn, or skim milk and shorts, fed in the proportion of three to one, make an excellent ration for weanlings. If skim milk is not available, a mixture of five parts cornmeal, four parts middlings, and one part tankage, fed as a thin slop, is very good. Good succulent pasture is always beneficial. It will aid wonderfully in putting growth on the young pigs, and the grain expense will be lessened. After a litter of pigs has been weaned and are eating well, the most difficult part of their care is over.



The "Auto Roller Track" tractor attachment in action.

FROM A FORD TO A "TRACKLAYER."

A tractor attachment that is attracting attention among farmers and orchardists, and which has a number of unusual features, is now being placed on the market by the Pony Tractor Company of No. 165 North Los Angeles street, this city. The attachment, which is designed to be used for converting a Ford car into a tractor, incorporates the "creeper" principle of operation. It is called by the manufacturers the "Auto Roller Track" tractor attachment.

The Pony Tractor Company put on the market a year ago a small tractor attachment known as the "Pony" This pulls a two-horse load and has been sold extensively throughout Southern California. The new Auto Roller Track attachment, with its tracklaying method of locomotion, is declared to have stepped into equal favor.

The new attachment, it is stated has proven especially satisfactory in loose dry sand or silt, where its principle of traction has worked to advantage. It is designed to pull a four-horse load and to cover the ground at the rate of two and a half miles an hour. A special featrue is its "quantity lock," which clamps the attachment into place without bolts. To attach the equipment it is oonly necessary to raise the Ford and run the "Roller Track" under it, then let the car down again.

SALVAGE ALL THE FARM JUNK.

BY HAROLD J. WOOD.

In line with the campaigns of conservation which have been sweeping the country since the outbreak of the war is the impulse to salvage all of the useless iron and steel junk on the ranch. The demand for junk iron and steel at the present time makes the gathering up of such stuff a wise thing for the boy to undertake when he has nothing more urgent to occupy his mind.

When the scrap metal has all been collected together the farmer should see to it that valuable materials, such as clevises, hooks, horseshoes and pieces of scrap iron, have not been tossed into the heap, for these can be used to good advantage in the average ranch tinker shop and will cost big money if it is necessary to replace them in these times.

But all of the junk that appears to be of no further use on the premises may as well be sold off, else it will work its way into the earth as time goes on and be completely lost to the industrial world. When it comes to disposing of junk it is sometimes poor policy to deal with the junkman who calls at the house. It is a good idea to separate the steel from the iron, as the prices for them differ, and if the lot is mixed it will be graded at the price for the cheapest grade. If you have the time and space, and your heap of junk metal amounts to several hundred pounds, it will pay you to haul it to the city some day when you are making the trip, and sell it at some reputable junk yard, where you will be more likely to get what the stuff is actually worth.

More care is necessary in fattening calves than in feeding grown cattle, but, whenever possible, it is best to raise and finish beef cattle on the same farm.

When something seems drudgery, think of the trenches.

HANDLE AVERAGE GARDEN.

JUST because new garden tools are scarce and high in price the prospective gardener need not despair of preparing the soil and planting a garden, because it does not take many tools to work a garden, and if new tools are too expensive perhaps the old ones may be mended or second-hand ones bought at a moderate cost.

In a small garden (20x50 feet, 1000 square feet, or smaller,) where the work is all done by man power rather than by horse power, the only tools required are a digging fork or spade, a steel-tooth rake and a hoe.

Two stakes and a string as long as the rows are to be made will serve the purpose of a purchased garden line to lay of straight rows. The end of the rake handle or hoe handle may be used to mark out the row along the tightly-stretched string. The blade of the hoe may also be used for marking out the row.

For a medium-sized garden, of from 1000 to 2000 square feet, a hand cultivator, in addition to the hoe, rake and digging fork, is of service, and a time saver, but the crops can be cultivated very satisfactorily with the hoe alone. The digging fork is always very desirable for digging potatoes and breaking up ground that has become packed.

A larger sized garden running in size from 2000 square feet to half an acre, should be plowed with a team, and besides the rake and hoe, a hand cultivator, costing from $5 to $10, is necessary, unless the intention is to hire horse cultivating during the season. A long stout string will do to line out straight rows. The hand cultivator has several attachments, such as shovels, cultivator teeth, plow, rake and weeder, so it is serviceable for many purposes in caring for the garden. The digging fork is a necessity in a large garden, as is also a garden trowel, used in transplanting plants. The one-piece iron garden trowel is best and strongest, and may often be purchased for a few cents.

OTHER TOOLS.

There are many other garden tools for special purposes which may be useful occasionally, as follows:

Hoes—There are at least six special kinds of hoes besides the ordinary broad-bladed one in most common use, generally called the "garden" hoe, although it is really the "square," "draw," "corn," "field," or "socket" hoe. For working among small plants one of the narrow, pointed hoes is often useful; otherwise, the ordinary hoe is all that is necessary.

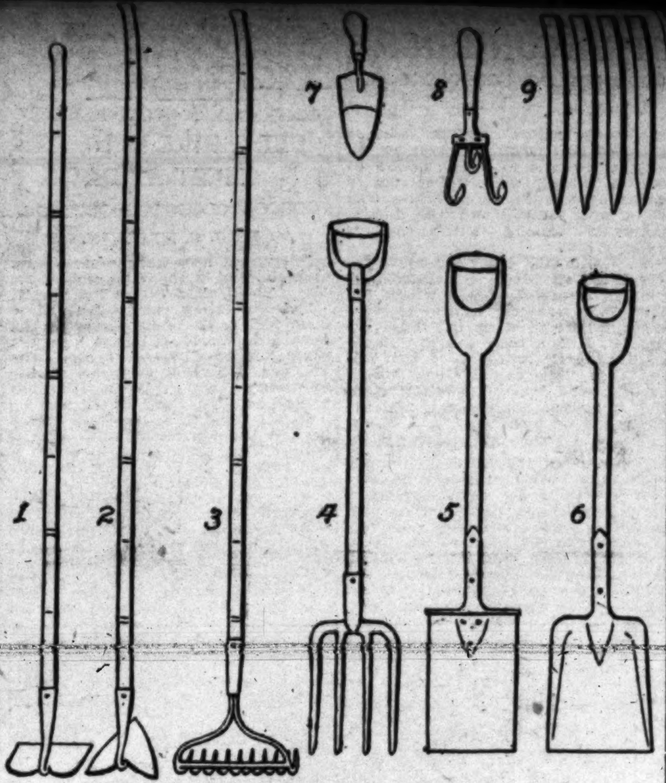
Dibble—A blunt-pointed tool for making holes when transplanting plants. A garden trowel is more serviceable than a dibble. A good dibble, however, can be made from a section of an old broom handle.

Hand weeder—This is not needed, but a good one can be made from an old metal hoop. Bind the two ends together so as to make a loop and tie the ends of the hoop together with cord, winding on enough to form a handle.

Potato hoe or hook—This is good for digging potatoes and some other crops, but is not necessary. A digging fork is much better.

Manure fork—A manure fork is very useful in a large garden to handle vines, corn stalks, manure, etc.

Watering pot—This is more convenient for watering plants than is a bucket, but a bucket and tin can with nail holes in the bottom can be made to do duty in place of a watering pot.



Some essential and some useful garden tools.

The implements are: (1) hoe; (2) heart-shaped furrow hoe; (3) steel-tooth rake; (4) fork; (5) spade; (6) shovel; (7) trowel; (8) scratch weeder; (9) stakes. The handles of the hoes, it will be noted, are marked off in feet and half-feet for convenience in making measurements in the garden.

HOW TO STAMP OUT INFECTION.

In any outbreak of infectious disease among animals on the farm or in the neighborhood thorough disinfection of the premises is essential in preventing its spread. Certain substances such as freshly-slaked lime, or unslaked lime in powder form, chlorid of lime, carbolic acid, corrosive sublimate, formalin, formaldehyde gas, or a compound solution of cresol posses the power of destroying bacteria with which they come in contact. To make the use of such substances of value, however, the work must be done with the utmost thoroughness. Careless disinfection is probably worse than none if it merely serves to give a false sense of security.

In the disinfection of stables and premises, according to one expert, the following directions should be carefully observed:

Sweep the entire interior surface, including ceilings, side walls, stall partitions, floors, etc., free of dirt and dust.

Remove all accumulations of filth by scraping and if any woodwork has become decayed so that it is porous or absorbent, it should be removed, burned and replaced with new material.

If the floor is of earth, remove four inches from the surface and replace it with earth from an uncontaminated source; or if improvements are desired, a new floor of concrete may be laid, which is very durable and easily cleaned.

All refuse material from the stable and barnyard should be removed to a place not accessible to the stock and covered with freshly-slaked lime. The manure spread upon the fields should be turned under immediately.

The entire interior of the stable, especially the feeding troughs and drains, should be saturated with a disinfectant, as a 3 per cent. compound solution of cresol, which would be four ounces of the compound to every gallon of water.

The best method of applying the disinfectant is by means of a strong spray pump, such as those used by fruit growers in spraying trees, or a small garden sprayer may be used.

All mangers and feed boxes which have been sprayed should be allowed to dry, and then be washed out with hot water to prevent poisoning the stock. The spray should be applied immediately following any outbreak, and as a matter of precaution, it may be used once or twice yearly.

All stables, like houses, should have ample window space in order to admit a plentiful supply of sunlight and fresh air, in themselves among the most powerful disinfectants known. Most disease germs thrive in dampness, dirt, and darkness, and a clean, dry stable presents the most unfavorable conditions for their development. For this reason good drainage is also essential in the stable and about the barn lot.

The B. P. Bosbyshell Company announces having completed arrangements for the demonstration of the Heider tractor on the ranch of Walter Lowe near Palms. The tractor is to be shown in actual field work.

Mr. Hymer of the local Holt Manufacturing Company branch, recently made a trip to Imperial Valley in the interest of the "Caterpillar."

H. L. Marsh of the Samson Sales Company, spent the past week at San Bernardino, where he had the Samson sieve-grip tractor on display at the orange show.

H. M. Bacon, general manager of the Belt-Rail Tractor Company of St. Paul, Minn., is in the city cooperating with the Frost Farm Machinery Company in demonstrating the Belt-Rail tractor.

Agnott & Co., announce that they have taken over the line of the Appleton feedcutters, the home office of which is in Batavia. Three shipments of Walter A. Wood harvesting machinery, including mowers, rakes, binders, cutters, reapers have just been received by the same company.

J. J. Dauch, president of the Sandusky Tractor Company, and William Rabb, local representative for the Sandusky, attended the San Bernardino orange show last week.

Harry A. Ford, California representative of the Geneva Adapto Tractor Company, reports the arrival of a carload of Geneva Adapto tractors, of which more than one-third are now being delivered to various parts of the State, from Imperial Valley to the San Joaquin Valley.

SAVING THE FEED.

Eighteen million horses on 6,000,000 American farms ate enough grain last year to feed 40,000,000 people, or about one-third of the population of the United States. These figures from the Department of Agriculture at Washington assume vast importance in the light of the government's propagandum to increase the production of food during the war. However, due to many causes, chief among them the tendency of the up-to-date farmer to motorize his farm, horses are becoming fewer and fewer every day. Every horse that gives way to the modern mechanical "beast of burden," the farm tractor, is helping to defeat the enemy by conserving his daily ration of feed.

STOCK PROTECTED.

Horticultural Commissioner Collins of Tulare county is requiring this year, as usual, the defoliation and dipping in rosin wash of all citrus stock entering Tulare county. He states that he believes this to be the most practical method of protecting the citrus growers, past experience having shown that it is not practical to inspect citrus stock in foliage.
